

Re: Guinea Fowl chick is not well

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.agriculture.poultry/2006-04/msg00086.html>

- From: diddy <diddy@xxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Thu, 27 Apr 2006 16:15:49 -0500
-

"Jacob Johnston" <aracauna@xxxxxxxxxxxx> composed these thoughts and posted them news:YY-dnUv-9bmwrMzZnZ2dnUVZ_vadnZ2d@xxxxxxxxxxxx:

Actually, it sounds like it'd be cheaper to just buy a moderately sized flock of turkey poults, raise them to maturity and then sit outside the pen and shoot them. Then again, hunting is never about saving money. I deer hunted as a teenager. I quit pretty much the season I bagged my first and only deer. It wasn't guilt, I eat meat and understand where it comes from and it was a clean shot and instant kill. I just didn't get enough gratification from the kill to justify sitting in a tree stand for 2 months every year. Guys who really love hunt seem to enjoy the relaxing and doing nothing out in the woods more than the actual achievement of the goal.

Jacob

It would be. But I like the idea of eating meat that comes as nature intended it to be packaged. They know what fresh air, blue skies, green grass, and know what it is to have their feet in the dirt. We do not buy meat. We hunt it, or raise it ourselves

.