

Hurrah! The girls have started to lay again. Safe to eat the first egg?

Hurrah! The girls have started to lay again. Safe to eat the first egg?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.agriculture.poultry/2006-11/msg00067.html>

- From: "Jonathan" <digitaltoast@xxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Sun, 19 Nov 2006 12:02:53 -0000
-

Almost 2 months ago, all 6 stopped laying, within a day of each other.

This morning, I have an egg! Hurrah! But is it safe to eat these "first returning eggs". Is there a chance they could have been festering, partly formed, in an oviduct somewhere?

PS – thanks to those that suggested it – a rabbit feeding syringe and half a put of bio yogurt brought "small scared hen" back to health.