

Re: Codliver oil

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.agriculture.poultry/2007-04/msg00027.html>

- From: "Peggy" <fampom@xxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 13 Apr 2007 13:18:29 +0800
-

Thanks,

I will try the baby oil as my 4yr old dose not use it and I have a few bottles around the place still..

Peggy

"enigma" <enigma@xxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:Xns99106677F88BEenigmaempirenet@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

"Jill" <news@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in news:461dffdb\$0\$8718\$ed2619ec@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx:

Peggy wrote:

I was told it was good for scaly leg. and was just wondering if it was ok for feeding to my birds . Or painting the perches and letting the fumes of the cod liver oil help with the mites. Or would my chooks get to much through the feet..

Ahh

For scaly mite its for the smearing on purposes – lots of smearing on the legs.

The aim is to use something -- anything – that suffocates the blighters and at the same time conditions the scales.

The best is the old version of dunking legs in jamjars of white spirit which gets right up in under the scales and kills the mites but does dry up the scales a bit more, followed by lashings of vaseline over the legs which continues to work on killing the mites and really softens the scales.

i used baby oil with aloe vera. told the chooks it'd make their legs sexy ;) seriously though, it works really well & doesn't stink like cod liver oil, which is useful because you're going to be wearing more of it than the chooks...

Re: Codliver oil

lee <and i had it around because i never used oil on the kid>