

Re: Another Electric fence question

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.agriculture.poultry/2008-01/msg00050.html>

- From: "Amy Blankenship" <Amy_nospam@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 25 Jan 2008 08:04:03 -0600
-

"Jill" <news@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:13pj9pgc4n1km70@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Ron Hardin wrote:

Wm.Koehler's method of curing a dog of killing chickens was to pen up the dog with a chicken, the chicken on a cardboard box floor so as to insulate him, and tie the chicken to a stake so he'll stay on the cardboard, and charge him up with a fence charger.

Fortunately the rest of the world has more sense
And these are feral dogs

Bill Koehler was actually fairly progressive in his day. The idea that you would actually give the dog a chance to do something right (albiet not a fair chance, since he'd never been trained at that point what to do) before you punished him was a revolutionary idea in dog training at the time. Today, we look at him as something as a barbarian, but it's kind of like the biblical "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." That was toned down from the tradition of the time, which was if someone hurt you you'd take out his whole family. You have to go through the stages before you can get to "turn the other cheek."