I'm starting to believe the "regulars" of sci.anthropology are a group of old fogies sitting in plush cushiony chairs smoking their stinky cigars and leaving an occassional fart.

>

"I've been zinging their profession by accusing them of deceit, deception, collusion and conspiracy and they've been reacting like Little Bo Peep.

>

That's because they're afraid of me and my discoveries of petrified bones, teeth and soft organs (some human) between anthracite veins.

>

They KNOW I'm right and their theory is Mother Goosey.

>

They're frightened that their theory of the evolution of man will soon go down the drain like the crap they're passing off as science -- and possibly a lot of their vested interests.

>

Over at talk.origins at least, I give credit to the howlers of talk.origins and sci.anthropology.paleo who are doing their very best to ward off their trip to annihilation.

>

Of course, it's going to be awfully embarrassing for them, too.
