

sci.anthropology.paleo: ridiculous dry apers (Re: MV is the most published author of SAP)

ridiculous dry apers (Re: MV is the most published author of SAP)

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.anthropology.paleo/2004-12/0702.html>

From: Marc Verhaegen (fa204466_at_skynet.be)

Date: 12/23/04

Date: Thu, 23 Dec 2004 13:13:05 +0100

"Algis Kuliukas" <algis@RiverApes.com> wrote in message news:1103777377.989848.138430@c13g2000cwb.googlegroups.com...

...

> You're also wrong to say Marc had no provocation.

Of course, he's wrong, the fool. Well, the very first time when I got into SAP (IOW, before ever posting anything here!), 5 or more years ago, that very day, I saw my name mentioned by some dry aper who believed that the famous passage was wrong: "In a Neandertal swimming on his back, the large nose with distal nostrils and the protruding midface surrounded by large air sinuses functioned as a snorkel." (from one of my Med.Hyp.papers, can be found in the files of <http://www.onelist.com/community/AAT>). I knew this passage would elicit reactions, but since I like some controversion & try to write as concise as possible, I didn't change it. The dry apers are incredibly stupid here: a child can see that if a neandertal with a protruding nose (Zollikofer hadn't yet published on neandertal noses then) floated on his back, his nose worked as a snorkel. Only idiots (as we find many of them here) deny this. Whether or not neandertals really did this frequently, I don't know, but for some obscure reason (read: lack of intelligence) dry apers think they have to laugh at it, although they're still unable, after so many years, to give 1 argument against the hypothesis. I can't describe their behaviour in other words than unscientific biasedness. The same with all my other hypotheses. I don't care whether my hypotheses are wrong, but if somebody believes they're wrong, he should at least be able to give some arguments...

:-D

--Marc

Stone walling every

> pro-AAH argument in the way you have done for YEARS is incredibly

ridiculous dry apers (Re: MV is the most published author of SAP)

sci.anthropology.paleo: ridiculous dry apers (Re: MV is the most published author of SAP > frustrating. As you know only too well yourself, one's patience has a > tendency to snap eventually. Marc's snapped a long time ago. I > sympathise with that but still don't condone his readiness to call > people idiots. But even there, people have called Marc far worse than > 'idiots' and 'fools' for YEARS too. You just pretend that fact away > though in your attempt to vilify and de-humanise someone who's only > crime is to understand that human evolution was clearly greatly > influenced by water and get very frustrated that so-called experts have > argued themselves into such a corner on this that they would rather > argue that black is white than admit they had made a monumental and > fundamental mistake.

>
> > B) You idolize an asshole who hasn't shown a hint of standard > courtesy for > > a number of years. You idolize someone who has what goes far beyond > habit > > of attacking a range of posters. Is his modal abuse as nasty as I > got?
> > No, but the prick spent years earning his due.
> >
> > Do note what kind of company you keep with Marc. You pick your idols
>
> > poorly.
>
> Now if I'd have written that you'd have lectured me about not having > the presumption to decide what you think. I do not 'idolise' him, nor > do I suggest that he is a sub-human piece of shit. Some of us are able > to hold more moderate positions.
>
> I'm really only replying to this to remind everyone that Jason is > clearly in absolutely no mood for an apology on calling a fellow > newsgroup poster the lowest kind of insult possible.
>
> I'm going to end this by getting back on thread. MV might be the most > published author on SAP, and I suspect he has called others idiots or > fools far more often than anyone else but Jason Eshleman must be the > number one candidate for the most abusive poster on this newsgroup.
>
> And with that, I have nothing more to say about name calling. Can we > please get back to debating human evolution?
>
> Algis Kuliukas
>