

Question regarding the Somerled article above

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.anthropology.paleo/2005-08/msg00815.html>

- From: "VBM" <v.mcalister@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Tue, 23 Aug 2005 19:42:40 GMT
-

Sorry for not posting this with the article below, but my news server is not letting me for some html reason. As historian for Clan MacAlister in the US, I would like to ask a basic question: Does the Norse "Y" chromosome mean that Somerled had to have a Norse father? The genealogies have always recognized that Somerled was half-Norse (the article below seems to be saying that the genealogies have him as entirely Celtic, which would not be correct). His father was Gillebride, the King of Argyll (Celtic), who married the daughter of the King of Man (Norse, at the time).

.

- Follow-Ups:
 - ◆ Re: Question regarding the Somerled article above
 - ◇ From: rmacfarl
 - ◆ Re: Question regarding the Somerled article above
 - ◇ From: deowll
- Prev by Date: Question regarding Somerled article posted above
- Next by Date: Re: butchering sites at the intersection of river channels (Re: AAT is based on comparative data (Re: Algis ranting about AAH
- Previous by thread: Question regarding Somerled article posted above
- Next by thread: Re: Question regarding the Somerled article above
- Index(es):
 - ◆ Date
 - ◆ Thread