Funny how I should hit upon this snag. I want to know how Dawson died. I want to know if it was by natural causes or whether he was murdered. Perhaps poisoned.

The only thing I am able to find is "he died prematurely". But that does not say how he died.

His role in the Piltdown Hoax would have rewarded him with a knighthood and perhaps the first Englishman to gain knighthood from a fraud. So there would have been several persons keen to see that such a shame would not come about.

So this story of the Piltdown Hoax is not going any further until a careful examination of the causes of Dawson's death is revealed.

This would call for an autopsy to see if he had been poisoned. Unless of course Dawson had been run over by a train or gone to France to fight in WW1 and shot by the Germans or something unmistakably *not murdered*.

I find it odd that no-one raises the issue of the death of Dawson, as if it were kept silent.

Perhaps the most important clue of the Piltdown Hoax is the cause of death of premature Dawson.

Because the entire Piltdown Hoax could be explained away that Woodward was called up by the British royalty and asked to produce a English Hominid and given a deadline date to reveal to the world. Woodward caught in such a pressure joined with Dawson to manufacture a fraud.

See we need to explore how Dawson died, was it natural cause or was it murder.
