They had a much greater impact on American society (and especially academia and politics). Some of the most senior and influential people in the social scientists are children or grandchildren of Frankfurt School's principal adherents. Some of their best students went on to careers in politics, not as politicians but as policy makers.

Verstand.

Right now, it's rather a messy situation. Most discussion of any sort, whether academic, political, or religious, is being dominated by the loudest voices on the most extreme sides. More disturbing is the domination of scientific discussion by social and political arguments that are tangential to the central points of discussion.

After many years living and visiting over most of the world, and even though I enjoyed many of those countries (and especially Germany, especially Munich), I chose to stay and live in the US. These days I am seriously considering immigration.
