

Re: Copyright laws

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.archaeology/2004-06/2506.html>

---

markovic_at_io.com

Date: 06/27/04

Date: Sun, 27 Jun 2004 10:49:06 +0500

In article <2CnBc.6996578$A2.792335@news.easynews.com>, Paul Murray <paul@murray.net> wrote:

> > no that book isn't public domain in US nor in any other country when it > > comes to the question of being scanned and published on net.

this is what i love about inger's statements. they are so hyperbolic that they cannot possibly be true.

as stated above, 100% of every nation in the entire world has a certain policy regarding copyright. just compiling a definitive list of every nation would be an impossibility.

do we include all the microstates that are not universally recognized? are puntland or kossova nations? does inger know the exact copyright policies of kossova and puntland?

> > Sorry for you > >but you better talk to one of the Officials at your goverment about it, they > >will tell you that there have been several cases up already which show your > >assumptions not to be valid.

if we are to believe inger's statement literally, she seems to be on speaking terms with at least one intellectual property official in each of these myriad lands. it's like the irish legend of the queen who's got so many servants, who have so many servants of their own and so on until the mathematical total is greater than the modern population of ireland.

the rest of us in the real world rarely get to speak to a single copyright official. we have to hire lawyers.

inger, however, sees all and knows all. sorry for you.