Well, if Ms. Johansson is unwilling or unable to answer questions that are raised directly as a result of her own assertions and theories then there is no reason for anyone to continue a dialog with her. Nor is there any reason why anyone reading her material should give it any consideration at all. One would be completely justified in ignoring her.

Would she accept a theory that a famous professor in Denmark has assured us that he was told by an Austrian monk that a solid anatase runestone (formed at 800°C from an Alpine sand on a Viking-brand stove in Minneapolis) is a doorstop at the Yale Beinecke Library and when it was used to block open the doors the dust from this stone wafted into the air and landed on the Vinland Map? Maybe she would! After all it makes as much sense as some of her stories.
