Well well Peter,

The rest you write is abuse.
All of what you wrote is Ad Hominem.

Ad who?

Hominem. You know, two words that are pronounced the same but have different meanings.

Or perhaps it's intelligent horses some Brit (or Mick?) stumbled upon in his travels. I can never remember which.

It is an apparent misspelling and in this context lichen is the most likely. But as far as I know lichen spores are normally excluded from a pollen
count, but maybe they are used in the lichen rich
arctic tundra analyses.
