For the time being, the title page hosted by Yahoo can still be retrieved from the Google cache. Language and style remind me of the first chapter of Inger's book, only that someone did a correction job. Sloppily, however. Linchpin University is mainly a library, and librarians of LU are buying manuscripts from everywhere – but instead of librarians we read Liberians (people from Liberia). So I dare surmise that Linchpin University was founded by Inger herself, and consists of her books at home, some e-mail contacts of her, and her many many many threads in the Usenet.

A virtual university could be fun, if declared for what it is: a dream of a university.
