Matt,
the 'host' supplier of the abusers are noted since long. The US person only changed suppliers but used same computer IP–address all the same. The Principal or what ever it's called as well as the boardmembers of the University have tried to stop him long ago.
Problem when it's a US person involved is that it takes long time to go the official road in some of the states.

Re: OT – to whom it may concern

When talking spam, IPs are also spoofed.

Could have been, isn't. Two of our 'fellow'–writers here in group have sent things you wouldn't dream of. Including tried to order this and that in my name. One, the one in US is now on his third year. He changed computer IP–address three times, but he isn't smart. He uses same computer to the group–messages as he does to those abusive stalking etc ones. The other isn't smart either – he alters in group as well as in the mails I referred to between two IP–address. One is at his work.....

If this is legit then I have no idea what your problem is. You copy the email with full headers and send it to abuse@xxxxxxxxxxxxx and say it is a violation of the terms of service. All the real ISPs are responsive. If it is any kind of legal issue and they know of it and do not stop it then they are jointly liable under US law for all penalties, civil and criminal.

To get full headers your newsreader will give an option to see them.

Saving a message to file includes all the headers. You don't have to understand them to attach it to a complaint.

And your newsreader is outlook express as it says so in your headers.
