

Re: Mesolithic/Neolithic Boundary (1) From Whence They Came.

value.
Oddly
however badger
and other animals
found the region
about San Sebastian
a favored [Mammal
Review
34
(2004)
249,284]
plenigalical

also [Mammalian Biology 70(2004) 227–241].

What has that to do with it?
And again it is too much trouble for you to provide the link for the benefit of your readers?

Excuse me? Your lucky to get a reference.

prd, IEJ, hmmm.....
Gotta love the willingness to back up pet theories on this group. And to think, when I had this problem with prd eariy in his sci.archaeology
career, Eric jumped down my throat claiming that prd was right ...

Eh? Are you referring to <http://tinyurl.com/qwhsk> or do you have something else in mind?

Just checked, and the answer is no. I'm referring to Re: Mesolithic/Neolithic Boundary (1) From Whence They Came.

Re: Mesolithic/Neolithic Boundary (1) From Whence They Came.

<http://tinyurl.com/pnpc6>

I'm not sure. If that link is to a conversation where he claimed that Irish people were descended from the Basques, then yes. If it is to something else, then no. For those interested, after much bull, I finally got to see the reference from where he said backed up his claims, and it turned out that he was using the term "Basque" incorrectly to refer to a mesolithic culture that existed long before, but which both the Irish and Basques do seem to have descended from.

If that is not what you are referring to, would you mind giving a link to what you were?

.... and I should accept it without references (mainly because at the time he was saying something Eric wanted to believe I think). As it turned out he was wrong then (due to using names given to one group to refer to a much earlier group), so it is a good idea to not only get references from him, but to check them thoroughly as well!

I am not here to do your work for you.

More pedanticisms.

(the pdf is 36 pp and 1 Mb)

You can get your mommy to help you read it.

But don't forget that human life during the last Ice Age was not restricted to refugia or even southern Europe. (Reindeer)hunters were Re: Mesolithic/Neolithic Boundary (1) From Whence They Came.

living as far north as possible.
Remember e.g.
Magdalenien, Gravettien,
Hamburg,
Creswell,
Federmesser/Tjonger, Ahrensburg.

'During the last ice age' covers a period from 113kya to 10kya.

I will deal with these issues in the next thread.

Eric Stevens