You really have to start flame-wars about Philips' implied
"racism"

and then start to talk to a well-known Nazi-pig ?

Are you really _that_ dumb or are you a kook, too ?

I think I /am/ that dumb, because I didn't know nothing about a nazi-giwer.

For fuxks sake ! Check the Usenet archives.

Every exchange with Geifer ends at Holocaust denial after the 12th post.

Look at soc.history.ancient.

When the idiots Agamemnon & cie aren't around, Matt "sterno-junkie" eifer will ruin any sane discussion.

I NEVER bring up the holocaustic psychosis. Clowns like you do. I then merely respond to the hysterical ancestry is wrong

attacks by the afflicted such as yourself.

And this was not about racism or nazism, but about someone who was complaining in scia about off-topic posting is SHA and then posting off-topic in scia himself. Is it that wrong to point to such a contradiction? Wrong enough to call me dumb or a kook?

I'll give you the benefit of doubt.
Now go check groups.google.com for that nice piece of shit.
After you've done that, you'll understand my reaction.
Really, check first, then answer.

No one can understand people with an emotional reaction to events which supposedly occurred to people they never met before they were born. It is a truly psychotic response. It does not have a formal DSM but certainly deserves one. It is like mourning the destruction of the legions in the German forest or the destruction of Baghdad by Ghengis Khan. It is incomprehensible to find people emotional attached to such events today.

If there were some recognition of this emotional disease perhaps a drug could be found to cure it. This disease is almost certainly contagious as it affects people who were born long after the events but oddly afflicted next to none until the mid 1970s and then spread slowly through the susceptible population. Its curious pathology should be the first clue to its cause. Seemingly emanating from NYC perhaps it comes from mold in the old building or perhaps spread by rats or fleas.
