Dear

We are pleased to announce the launch of a new website dedicated to the Conservation of Cultural Heritage: <http://www.e–conservationline.com/>.

The website was created for the publication of a new magazine, "e_conservation, the online magazine" which is entirely dedicated to all the professionals involved in the conservation–restoration of cultural heritage, namely conservators, archaeologists, historians, biologists, chemists, etc. The publication is committed to encourage the exchange of ideas, experience and knowledge dissemination among professionals, providing the latest relevant information in the field. The first issue of the magazine will be available on the website from September / October 2007 in digital format and will be free to download.

Aims and Scope

Our aim is to promote development in conservation by offering free access to information. We want to facilitate the international awareness of local interesting projects from all over the world which otherwise could remain limited to a closed circuit. We intend to publish quality papers in conservation–restoration and related fields, academic and non–academic articles, reviews, case studies, interviews, news and events among others.

We seek to maintain standards of high quality of information and presentation. Scientific articles will be peer–reviewed by an international scientific committee composed of conservators and scientists. Therefore e_conservation magazine may share some characteristics with a scientific journal, but its objectives should not be confused.

Open Access

Our philosophy is to provide open access to the knowledge and documentation in the field of conservation. Therefore the magazine will be available for free, downloadable in our website. In this way

new magazine on Conservation of Cultural Heritage

we hope to overcome the geographic and economical limitations of a paper-based publication.

The website

Besides the magazine, the website offers many features that the conservation community will be interested in: a calendar of events with over one hundred conservation-related events worldwide, an online database with current posts of available jobs and internships, a list of courses for professionals and many others. The website brings as well the most recent news in conservation, being permanently updated by our team.

Call for papers

E_conservation magazine is now open to the submission of papers on a large range of topics, including but not limited to: conservation and restoration treatment of works of art, conservation science and theory, preventive conservation, cultural management, documentation and ethics.

All interested authors are invited to check the areas of publication on our website for further details.

Finally, all interested individuals or institutions are welcome to collaborate within this project.
