right Giwer.
Anyway, if we drop the

this is perhaps self-delusion?

You mean the stone age was worse than the religious wars between and among the monotheistic religions? I have to ask you for your evidence of that.

I have no illusions about Stone Age! For me it is an unbreakable imprisonment for Man over 10,000 of years, due to all kind of deseases with no cure, and a mean duration of life at 20 years. Only the sympathy of God eventually helps us out

If you mean by Man, HSS, then it is over 100,000. If you include H.Erectus then in the millions of years.
As for their overall health, what has been found makes it quite clear hunter-gatherers were much healthier and had fewer diseases than their later
farmers and city dweller until a couple hundred years ago.

Re: Solid Ground

So at the very end of the Stone Age they had a happy time.

I recited the findings of anthropologists.

I responded to this by you.

I am not sure, that I got you right Giwer. Anyway, if we drop the (religious) restrictions for our behaviour towards one another; the ticket goes right back to the Stoneage with express train. Or this is perhaps self-delusion?

To which I responded

You mean the stone age was worse than the religious wars between and among the monotheistic religions? I have to ask you for your evidence of that.

And you have been trying to get around that ever since. It says nothing about how good it was or how good they had it. I was simply pointing out the monotheistic religions have no evidence of any superior moral teachings that are preventing things from getting worse.

Religious wars are terrible, Holocaust was terrible, inquisitions and burnings are terrible (although there is a Paradise,– and there is a sunny day after a nights mare), but I am not seeking for reasons against religions or God.

Religious battles or rather promotions between the main– religions are carried out all the time. We experienced that in the 60ties:

Psychology, Freudianism (Jewish origin?). Transcendental meditation vegetarians (Hinduism), astrology with its reminiscences of Indian caste–systems (I am not a fish, a virgin, a unicorn. I am a human being!).Etc. When Christianity is weakened, it is by traditon challenged by muhamedanism. It always was.

Yes I feel, that the Stone age was a grusome era. If not deseases, what else hold them down from social developement for so many thousands of years? Something did.

Sincerely

Ole Hagen
