These are very industrious people are they not? <http://upload.wikimedia.org/wikipedia/en/3/3a/051-Moray.JPG>

These are more Nazca type lines, except they are no where near Nazca. <http://s2.supload.com/free/NazcaTypeLines-9-30-2007.jpg/view/> zooming out a little <http://s2.supload.com/free/NazcaTypeLines-9-30-2007-20070930052603.jp...>

I screwed up the zoomed out link.
Here it is again... <http://s2.supload.com/free/NazcaTypeLinesZoomedOut-9-30-2007.jpg/view/>

There are 400 square miles of that, right there in that area.
And it does not follow the contour of the land, it is simple decoration.
It boggles the mind.

Re: The Pre-flood Bolivian Matrix

I guess it is crop terracing.
(cocoa to make um chocolate maybe? Or to flavor coca cola?)

Well, maybe it isn't crop terracing.

The nice thing about this resource here is that people post their images from when they travel there, so you get a look at ground level. If you click above the bottom right image where it says see this area it gives you the full map. The weird Nazca like contour lines.

The most curious thing of all, is no one much cares when they find things like this except one or two people.
