Never but Never tell a Vietnam Vet we won in S.Vietnam.

I have some ex SF buddies who would tell you to your face what I wrote, and then some. And these were people doing the real dirty work personally over there. (several who did multiple tours too)

You opinion is not the only one VN veterans have.... Matter of fact, it is in the minority of vet's I know. (including one MOH winner)

You need to do some reading first sorry. We did win militarily in VM, if you do the numbers, the casualty statistic alone is way in our favor. We never lost one major engagement. We fought with our hands tied behind our back. The air force would have neutralized N VN very quickly, our leaders wouldnt allow it. Think your bitter ? You havnt talked to a Thud driver I can tell.... (I only know one personally)

We did lose VN in the press at home, and hence politically. But militarily, we indeed kicked their ass. The people at home grew tired of the war, but we certinally did not lose it on the field of battle. Our military didnt get forced out it left.

It sounds like your a true red GWB supporter, I'm NOT.

Correct, you got that right.
Unfortunately not liking bush is as far as your thinking goes.
Very sad.....

Re: Why "Project Orion" is more vital now than ever

End of Line.

Easy to say for people like you. You have no answer to the current problem, only bitterness toward anything conservative. Just like Dean, and the other liberals. At least they are so blinded by hate towards Bush, they will continue to lose elections till they realize they actually need a plan to govern the country. At about the same time, they might also realize that most of the country does NOT like their liberal ideals. (just look at how many states are closing the door on gay marriage, among other things)

BTW, how many soldiers who've been to Iraq have YOU talked to ?
