

Re: Agendas

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.astro.amateur/2008-03/msg00113.html>

- From: advicegiven <newvariables@xxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Wed, 5 Mar 2008 05:33:44 -0800 (PST)
-

On Feb 27, 8:49 pm, ukastronomy <martin_piers_nichol...@xxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

Yes of course he can "help it" – I worked with people with that condition all my working life and I promise you nothing is forcing him to act in this way. He is chosing to do it!

Get over yourself.

You're the one who tells lies all over the web, and promotes pseudoscience, and uses falses identities like ianhillsmith to attack people like crinklawa and mollise when they don't agree with you, and copies stuff from all over for your postings.

One who sets up blogs and mails to lists about how evil and horrible people are, in secret, without telling them, in the old style of green crayon letters to the editor. Yet attacks anyone who doesn't agree with you, often again using your false identities. Many still archived on lists, although you seem to have become craftier since I revealed that time that you and your false identities were posting from the same modem.

Interesting that you always have links to wrong doing, but when your webpages say something about how you use people's methods, you are incapable of giving the source url or paper as reference, so people can check you are doing what was said there.

That you don't tell people that you secretly post files and images to yahoo groups without telling anyone on the lists, as is normal practice, via an announce, how you post links to your blogs too at times.

The testament to you work is how much you've managed to publish in formal peer reviewed journals, despite many attempts to do so. And how much of your work is related to what marvellous thing you've done, rather than related to the topic at hand, and whether it is interesting.

Re: Agendas

In fifty years time all "your" stars, double, variables, deepsky objects, postings, pseudoscience, and the like might still be around on some ancient webarchiving facility somewhere, but it will not be known otherwise in any way. Possibly even in ten years time. However, your emails and attacks, especially using pseudonyms to agree with yourself and/or cowardly attack others in a sneaky way, will exist as long as yahoo groups and usenet groups have online archives, with the attendant coincident modem IP addresses.

I do not pity people who take your word for things without examining any science or logged facts, I wonder at them.

Part of my anger towards you at current is that many people, including myself, have tried to help you with astronomy, have advised you on how to manage to find all these doubles and variables you wish to become famous for, somehow. You've never thanked them, nor even replied to them I have been told, and when you do use their work to manage to achieve what you had formerly achieved before, never fully credit them nor reference them.

You are a user who sulks and abuses when he is caught breaking the rules. For anyone who cares to search the web for lists of postings by newbinaries or newbinaries@xxxxxxxxxxxxx, the evidence is clear.

Apparently people are aware of how you behave, but seem somewhat afraid because of these blog tactics. Don't push it too far, is my advice. I'm just the least patient of the people who've caught you lying and cheating, and don't actually worry about the abuse you hand out. I worry more for the poor souls who give you credence, that is, the ones I can find who aren't using a BT Broadband account in west N'ants according to message header IP tracings. Those latter, I tend to feel, are bound to agree with you.

.