OK while I respect privacy,

And I respect freedom of speech,

However.....

If I were a company like Google, I could simply enforce the security responsibility that comes from monitoring the data passing through one of my servers. Looking for viruses and whatnot, not to mention I would have bought and maintained, not to mention provided access through said servers to someone like yourself. AND paid the bandwidth fees that come with said access.

Privacy.....

From "Whom" exacty.....

You said your mom could do a search and find your chats.....

DID your mom do a search and find your chats, or maybe your girl/boyfriend, or you husband, or wife?

So now its Googles fault your homelife sucks.....

If your standing on a street corner and your planning with your friend about robbing the bank across the street, and a cop walks by, waits for you to act, arrests you and says in court that he overheard you on the street and that tipped him off. Is the case thrown out because the cop violated your "privacy"

It does not matter where you go, what you do, where you chat or with whom.....Theres an old saying and it goes like this.

"If you dont want something heard, then dont say it."

Re: Dear Google

Everything that is said here is public.....

Now think about the industry.....

I am willing to bet you ANY amount of money that your activities are much more closely monitored than you think.....

I used to work in the industry, every internet service provider has a "cacheing" server used to speed up access to their customers most actively used webpages.....that's part of the network structure, and your NOT changing it. Without it, load times would be a lot longer than they are.

Bet you didn't think of THAT huh.

Deal with your punishment, and remember, next time don't be stupid and say something you don't want heard.

Rising-Star

It's nothing like that.

Someone once said: the US government archives all phone calls. But they don't make them available to mother, that's what Google does with chat, which ****I**** made from home. From home, and along those lines. Google CANNOT touch it, nor Bush. Illegal in the name of humanity.

OK

In the name of Humanity.....

Bush cannot be touched. I do not agree with it, but LEGALLY, in the UNITED STATES, the commander in chief cannot be held accountable for anything he does in the name of national security. Like I said, I don't agree with it but that's the law. If Bush says he wants to see your email or chat messages because he thinks you're a terrorist, guess what? If the server is on US soil he is and there's nothing that can be done without congress backing you up. Since the Republicans control congress.....good luck with that.

The United States has been wiretapping international telephone cables since the telephone was invented. WW1 and WW2 documentaries state this.

Cellphone. emails, screened for specific words.

Re: Dear Google

Re: Dear Google

Since 9–11 there IS NO privacy in this country that cannot be legally compromised.

Bush 2 has proved that the voting system in America is screwed. His brother bought him the first election by having his state screw up there voting so even after Gore was declared winner bush STILL won.

In the second election there were computers in Ohio registering –x votes.

How can you end up with a negative amount of votes? Are they anti–votes? and what happens if an anti–vote comes into contact with a vote.

So as you can see, our most SACRED power as a United States citizen is even moot.

Drudge report was saying Jeb Bush(FL governor that screwed up the first election) may run to continue the Bush Dynasty.....

If Google is posting things that are being chatted about on THEIR servers, theres not alot you can do. see

If your the guy in the last panel.....and you signed up.....guess what

Read the terms of service yourself (and 99% of the world just clicks "i agree" to, which IS legally binding, you did agree to sign up for the GOOGLE service, and they have made it public that they do this), so the legal leg you were standing on just got hit by a truck.

Working with internet service providers in the past I can tell you if you click "I agree" its binding. I could not tell you the number of dial up customers one company had calling in from frequent disconnects. Not one of the read there terms of servcie which clearly stated there was a 4 hour disconnect. Did they get refunds? Hell no. They agreed and then used the service. Unfortunatly, so did you.

The only avenue left for you is to get a laywer and pray to god Google missed something in there terms of service that you can use. They are a BIG company with LOTS of money to hire very EXPENSIVE laywers. They could drag this out for so long that by the time it hits court the internet will be absolute and your point will be moot.

The lesson to be learned here is twofold. The first one is already stated

Re: Dear Google

Re: Dear Google

"if you dont want something said. dont say it"

The second is a little trickier

"If you do not "read" and just click "I agree" to feed the greed, for the app or game you need....."

The be prepared to pay for your short sightedness.....

If you were on my server, then the terms you would have agreed to would have a clause in it saying that "I" lay claim to all data passing through MY server regardless as to where it came from.

Double check and make sure Google doesnt.....because if they do.....

Not to metion, they could pack up and move to an island in international waters and then what?

WINMX did it, and with a few minor adjustments it will work regardless as to where you are, AND since there not based in the US, they cannot be touched for copywrite infringement. Only the end-user (you or me) can be charged.

SPAM is illeagle in several states, yet you keep getting it. Why? because it passes through a Korean server that the US has no juristicition over. Therfor, it cannot be stopped except by the end user.

The United States citizen fall into 2 catagories.....

ONE the rich

TWO people the rich exploit

Need a tax break? Oh your not rich? That a tax increase for you.....
