It has

more

Europa.
They
use biological means, and their host

to move in.

There was sign of aliens, the reaction
was that why would aliens
travel 7
million lightyears to just turn back? The answer is they need a home.

What are the chances of two

For

Wouldn't
this suggest
the possibility
of life being involved?

Europe has moved from Kingdoms, wars to civilization.
The US moved from occupation to occupation to the mid-East crisis.
The aliens moved from evolution to Star Trek explorations. Chances are humans are not the first to spread away from Earth.

Bioevolution,
bio-organisms were the key.

The level is being questioned if there is a possibility to eat humans, to eventually crash Europa into Earth, wipe out everything even
bacteria,
and plant their seeds.

Chances are humans were not the first to leave their planet

just as Earth is not the center of the Universe.

It only makes sense for them to come here if they settle. It really does not make sense for them to travel 7 million lightyears here, find a habitable place and then to quickly turn around. Though they probably have seeds that allow them to live inside warm roots on any planet that has liquid and a warm core.

p.s. they certainly did not evolve on Europa. They certainly don't look like the 70's pictures, ant heads, large eyes, little narrow legs, portraying evolution in terms of distinguishing humans from apes and how one sees the future with a large forehead, little mouth and so on, but all so human-like. Chances are they did not evolve from apes, but perhaps from a Dolphin-like creature, something beautiful, or from lizzard-like animals with long split tongs, or from large birds on a very large planet that has a very dense atmosphere allowing flight, or from snakes, giant insects that have louns, maybe 8 eyes like spiders.

Oh, here is one more. We can see that the tunnel system is built up on one side of the planet, possibly the better side. In color we see that the tunnels come with green and reddish surroundings, the colors of food source brought from the center of the planet to the roots. The planet's surface is ice. These roots need a source of light and are located under the ice where temperatures do not go below 0 degrees celcius.

Light. Phosphor. Water. Maybe they are building a new home for the humans, planning to relicate everybody there and move into Earth.
