Read the last sentence alive in front of the mirror, and think of Washington.

Not the last sentence. I mean the last paragraph. Oh and a typo.
Attile the Hun ate his own brother for half the empire. You read it, and you think of Washington. "Some called it politics."

(it refers to 'that kind of mentality' that you would imagine in daily life there, where such magnitudal arrogance is perceived as normal politics, but magnitudal arrogance radiated from Ceausescu for example, who was not of human culture but wanted to eradicate all that and was disturbed.)

Part 1:

Do not disturb, the Gestapo. Ceausescu sat and wrote at his desk, outside on the hall men stood silently by the walls. All his interests are security related, and as that he was pretty much a dictator.
