Part 14 (didn't check spelling or consistency)

Landlords of Policies

Racist declaration of law is very primitive. Racism is ruling. One is ruled as this, one is ruled as that. Racism is ruling, and it is highly offending to be subject of classism and unfair treatment, where human rights arises and one finds that black history is violated in the Iraq war. 80–90 percent of Arabs think negatively of Americans as a result of the Iraq war. Racism can give unprecedented conditions to a leader on grounds of security when a system is served more deerly than a country. Ceausescu sat, wrote, and all he cared about is security in everything, and Ceausescu dreamed of police cameras in the streets and ignored all interest in culture and humanity and pursued his dictatorial status where his pet projects meant a lot to him, and were perceived as horrible crimes by humanity. A dictatorial monstrosity in the making, the wiping out of all cultures for the economy, a military machine ran by a coup in power. Black people know that racism is not fun, one might call it racist security, with Ceausescu's fun machine of police not giving chance to people, culture and democracy, and basic rules in life such as innocent until proven guilty is harshly controlled by yes, fascist makebelief that refuses to verify facts and acts based on conspiracies as an iron machine of power over people.

In one of my never published books I wrote about a circumstance where in the near future Republicans will deny election rights under a state of emergency. The war against terrorism represents such a state of emergency where borders of all countries are to be treated as preemptive territory for strikes by the United States where the USA determines terrorist activities. A state of emergency rises by further problems that the United States feels it needs to address but without success. As election rights are delayed for at least a year due to these problems, people rise and are arrested. All basic human rights to protest are over-riden by a dictatorial conditions where military takes over all powers. Tanks are in the streets and forces all to comply to a now dictatorial control of power that cannot risk elections under the radical extremist power. The extreme right takes full totalitarian control and orders arrive to shoot anyone on sight, a condition seen in World War II Germany.

In my story what happened is that terrorists poisoned all the Democratic leadership at a convention, well, it wasn't terrorists, it was an ex KGB agent from the old Soviet Union. In the story a man was blamed who was seen on the cameras at the convention, a reporter who was fooling around and with two other reporters he kept running into in conventions they went to play in vacant facilities, running on chairs, and being kids, and finally leaving the convention through a rear exit in one of the auditoriums. Meanwhile a bad weird face is seen in the kitchen.

This was a world that followed where tanks are lined up in Washington DC in the streets and people are running in fear as gunshots are heard and people running close to a tank standing in an intersection barely misses them with the first firing. Now everybody is running for their lives.

Today, November 5, 2007:

Thousands of lawyers are protesting in Pakistan and arrested violently as a military dictatorship postponed elections for at least a year. Once a similar takeover of government brought Saddam into power where he took control of the military and ordered execution of the top political opponents. All because of a relentless condition of not tolerating terrorism. Later Saddam was tied to terrorism by Bush and Saddam was hung with several relatives who sat in power within days apart, one of his relatives was decapitated during hanging, a rare incident where the rope tore his head off in barbaric circumstances horrifying the common European. We've seen communism, tavarishes. Hanging people was a fairly common way of execution in the United States 200 years ago, a very personal and barbaric solution, while in Europe witches were still burned 200 years ago, and a very grotesk barbaric elements we haven't seen for so long are being displayed from Abu Ghraib to the decapitation accident during hanging of Saddam's half brother.

Nov 5, 2007: From the Associated Press, BEN FELLER reports:

President Bush says he gains influence with world leaders by building personal relations with them. Pakistani President Pervez Musharraf got a dose of that diplomacy at the White House last fall, when Bush hailed him as a friend and a voice of moderation.

Part 14 of Psycho Barbarian

"The president is a strong defender of freedom and the people of Pakistan," Bush said that day, side by side with Musharraf.

Over the weekend, that advocate of freedom emerged with a different world image: a military dictator willing to crush the rights of his own people. Now Bush will need to rely on the other half of his personal diplomacy formula – dealing bluntly with those he has put faith in – and hope it works.

By unleashing a police state on his country, Musharraf put in motion a trifecta of trouble for the Bush administration. A nuclear-armed Pakistan lurched further into instability, civil rights and parliamentary elections were shoved aside, and the credibility of a Bush-backed leader took an enormous hit.

Musharraf declared a state of emergency on Saturday on grounds that Islamic militancy had become a grave threat to Pakistan. But his move also clearly targeted the Supreme Court in his country, which was weighing the legitimacy of his recent election and checking his power.

So, in a flash, came accounts from Islamabad that appalled and embarrassed U.S. leaders.

Police and soldiers rounded up Musharraf's rivals and dragged off protesters. Government buildings became barbed-wire compounds. Phones were cut off, the independent media were censored, and Musharraf, an army general serving a dual role as elected president, had authoritarian control.

The crisis revealed the limits of Bush's leverage.

His top diplomat, Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice, had implored Musharraf not to suspend the constitution and invoke emergency rule. Such outreach had worked before. It did not this time.

On Sunday, the second day of the crisis, Bush's team showed public signs of reassessing its options.

Rice, in Ramallah, West Bank for Middle East talks Monday, said Musharraf should cut his affiliation with the army and restore civilian rule. At a news conference, she urged him to follow through on past promises to "take off his uniform."

"I want to be very clear. We believe that the best path for Pakistan is to quickly return to a constitutional path and then to hold elections," she said.

The Pentagon postponed a meeting scheduled for this week in Islamabad between senior U.S. and Pakistani defense officials.

And, Rice's admonitions for a return to democracy grew. She said the U.S. government was reviewing billions of dollars in aid to Pakistan. But even there, there are limitations.

Most U.S. aid to Pakistan goes toward military support; the U.S. counts on Pakistan to help capture al-Qaida operations and provide intelligence. "We're obviously not going to do anything that will undermine the war on terror," said Gordon Johndroe, a spokesman for Bush.

Making matters worse: The parliamentary elections in Pakistan, considered by the U.S. to be a genuine step toward democracy in Pakistan, have long been scheduled for January. They now may be delayed up to a year.

"Let's not be delusional about the U.S. government's influence. This is a huge, complex country, and most everything is going to happen outside of our play," said Rick Barton, a Pakistan expert at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "But we can be a leader here."

By putting military rule ahead of the rights of his people, Musharraf has presented Bush with a test of sincerity of his freedom agenda, Barton said.

"Let's just accept that Musharraf's probably going to go down," he said. "Let's just do the right thing, and be seen by the Pakistanis as holding true to our own values and principles. Musharraf has clearly moved from being a force of moderation to being somebody who's more of a self-serving leader."

Another hopeful scenario in the U.S. view is that Pakistan's emergency states ends fast – a setback, but not a devastating one. Democracy is still the path that Pakistanis want, Johndroe said. "This is a slight detour," he said. "But I think they will get back on it. And we will strongly encourage them to do so."

Joseph Cirincione, a nuclear security expert and senior fellow for the liberal Center for American Progress, said there are few good American policy options in Pakistan. He said Pakistan is the world's most dangerous country – an unstable place of strong Islamic fundamentalist influences and a nuclear arsenal.

"If the government falls, if the Army splits, who gets the weapons?" Cirincione said. "Who gets the material for the weapons? Who gets the scientists who know how to build the weapons? Pakistan could go overnight from a major non-NATO ally to our worst nuclear nightmare."

Part 14 of Psycho Barbarian

Musharraf came into power in a coup in 1999. He became an ally of Bush's after the Sept. 11 attacks, and helped coalition forces battle al-Qaida.

Bush must now try to find a balance – maintain a strategic relationship with Pakistan on security without seeming to abandon the importance of human rights.

"Musharraf is losing whatever is left of his legitimacy. And without legitimacy, you can't do anything against terrorism," said Frederic Grare, who served as a counselor for the French embassy in Pakistan.

Grare said Bush still has leverage through U.S. aid to Pakistan, which has totaled more than $10 billion since 2001.

"Let's see how far they are willing to go," Grare said.

Bush is expected to make his first public comments about the crisis on Monday.

Meanwhile, Rice insisted Sunday that "The United States did not put all its chips on Musharraf."

Some on Capitol Hill aren't buying that.

"This administration has a Musharraf policy, not a Pakistani policy," said Sen. Joe Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and a presidential candidate.

"Its hands are pretty well tied right now. And it's put itself in a very difficult position, and, in turn, us in a difficult position."

End of report by BEN FELLER.

Barbarism has other sides in the United States and this one deals with Lassie, the dog, and people confined to ghettos. In Europe I learned that a ghetto is a bad thing where people are controlled, something with human rights conditions reminding of Hitler and Jews where confinement laws are not seen as a problem and the value of life is seen as little and that is also reflected by the high crime found in American ghettos leaving 17 thousand dead by deadly confrontations annually. The conditions of life are not only poor in these ghettos, but the human rights deterioration is also found in the luxury and primarily white dominated suburbs. Confinement restrictions play a severe role in American life, confinements erected over entire cities, large suburb cities.

Confinement big brother, erecting rules controlling way of life, lowering value of life and seeking replacement to all things general through privately controlled grounds of tough and luck policies reminding of the barbaric past that also feeds on a global military strength. Tough and luck is all it takes, but not to forget, just in the middle class 7.4 percent of the households have between 1 and 10 million worth of assets and investments, meaning in this powerful middle class society alone, more than one in 7 residents are millionaires. The general population in living in the middle class suburbs live ordinary lives, and invested wisely, built a future called the American dream where yes, success is not unfound. Over 80 percent of the millionaires in the world are in the United States. It is the richest country, but this richness can come with coldness, a place confined, and this confinement, a form of totalitarian and unfair classism is national scale from the poorest ghettos to the richest communities in Beverly Hills, everything is controlled, one that has gone beyond the most basic human existence of what normality would mean and what a world of restrictions can create instead, where all are brainwashed into barbarism and are discriminated against by an iron curtain of racism. Yes, black people were treated unfairly in the past, and a system that wants to serve the rich and higher class citizen by all means can create horrendous conditions for the poor, but also keeps a harsh classist separation in the richer communities that are still degrading, a sense of british royalty walks in pride and dictatorially walks unaware of the world. Yes, as Nancy Pelosi called, the phenomena of a blind king is in place in regards to his naked coat that all can see, except him. He believes in the naked coat. But you wouldn't believe the number of people in the world who would be happy to believe in that naked coat too and come to the United States. But you can't force it on everyone, let's be not childish about it, though that may sound very offensive in this part of the world. One is expected to put up the naked coat everywhere, people get rich from getting stocks at the company they work for, this is a place worshipped for opportunity, and of course those not in the game as they call it are to face unknown circumstances. Here bullies, bullyboys and pervasive people feel opportunity and seek highest salaries and benefits. Even a man without education can build up a carrier and make 65 thousand a year in management. My brother who is a musician and can't make a living with his profession went into management in factories. He worked with the machines, made minimum wage, but he is from a family with 3 Ph.D-s and a Summa Cum Laude and made it into management. I couldn't appreciate ass-licking, but my brother and my father who are both good at ass licking say I will never be a good business man. My father even admits to doing what bothers me most and turning to checking credit reports when he is hiring someone, a phenomena that most employees been doing in selecting only the elite in all regards of ghetto control fascism, a mindless discrimination serving the rich one with a clean and trustable record. To me to work in a human rights organization at a facility restaurant and receive employee of the month award comes with a different set of thoughts.

A carrier with a Summa Cum Laude is a good start, though education means little in what one makes in terms of salary and what another working next to him with the highest degree may be making at the same company, and yes, the one without a degree may be making three times as much. Salaries are kept secret. Yes, in one compant I did feel once that I was making a lot of money, but then I found out that a guy who was much worse in qualifications and skills was getting three times as much, but, when it came to a necessary layoff of 10 percent of the employees, they chose him when the budget was revised. Yes, one can negotiate a salary in the United States. It is amazing what we don't know. I am not saying we should start loving the Pakistani dictator and Bush's friend, because he is so hard on terrorism and he wants what Bush wants, and for people to be safe under a Capitalist dirt, and this dirt knows little feelings.

I can't complain of having good pretences for a carrier with my Summa Cum Laude. I dropped out of further studies when a disgusting Republican University Dean began following and collecting information on me that I am working and making money illegally as an immigrant in the United States and he left threatening phone calls on the answering machine, while my father was a staff member at his University. I worked as a volunteer at MCI, and as a volunteer I was not receiving a salary, but the Dean was there, taking photos and sent his information to the immigration and my Visa to the United States was denied. I quit my studies, didn't even have a chance to finish the semester at UCCS, but they were assholes and to my Summa Cum Laude added flunk grades in all subjects to my school credit. I figured my studies are over and I dropped out of masters studies. The freak didn't care that my father was a professor at the University and leaving threats upon threats bullyboy messages on the answering machine:

"I found out, I know whaccho've been up to. You are working illegally in this country, I reported you to the INS. You will be deported. I am the Dean of this University, and you violated the law. You will hear from the immigration! I saw you enter MCI. You are working! I know everything about you. (you are an illegal dirt in this country)."

What made him become Dean at the University is that he brought millions of funding money. The same people find positions in politics where the average sitting bank account sum needed for a carrier in the Senate is 15 million dollars, and only one thing counts. Good citizen status and lawlateralism with money, under the now popular commitment to policies: commitment rule of law, binding policies, be it Democrat or Republican, all endorse a laws first come first hypocrisy to good citizenry and patriotism, first of law with or without valid claims, must stand in not taking risks against illegal immigrant or suspicious activities, and suspicion drives this world of us and them of financial power and financial power is never to be underestimated.

I never wanted to come back to the United States after that. I was happy back in Hungary. I came back because of work, and I didn't want to come. I was getting $200 a month in Hungary and I was happy. I promised myself in Hungary that I don't want to deal with that freak country and I would stay, but some professor insisted that I come to work for him, just temporarily, but I ended up getting a work permit and also joined MCI where I stayed working for three and a half years, based on me solving a critical problem for them originally for which I volunteered and for which I was followed by the University Dean. My stay remained temporary year to year, I didn't want to stay in the USA, now temporary for 15 years since in the USA. I hate it, give or take racism a little more, policed suburb, and the Iraq war. I settled in Colorado, in a suburb called Highlands Ranch "where forget Rome, and love, and tourism, here cruising with a car in sightseeing without purpose here is not allowed in this official city that labeled itself as "The Pride of Colorado." I came here merely because when I was shopping for a home, something I decided one day without clear purpose and destination papers, I bought a home that found for a good price in this Denver suburb, and I didn't want to pay a three times higher price in the downtown region, it happened. In this 15 years I have become eligible for the American citizenship but declined. You can forget it with your excruciating human rights degrading fascist policing totalitarian policies of big brother. As teachers wore on their pins when the Iraq war started that "He is not my President", I too say "This is not my country of pride", you are not romantic. A tourist can get arrested for coming here, and visitors receive a Google security face when one who does not belong here appears with a backpack and photo camera at their headquarter campus.

Little I knew soon the CIA would be after me after expressing such thoughts in what I had to say about local politics in the city I live in. But for all sakes I remain a tourist, and this in itself is a tour guide, a book into primitivity and barbarism.

Let's take a trip. Why I love this place. I think all people should come here to visit once in their life, to a place that is not a world #1 tourist destination for Australians who never seen snow before and are found in the world's longest ski slopes and best Winter activities. This place is also an arrival point to the West. To the East of Denver what is found are plains, Kansas. Kansas. But to the West, one finds the famous West. Places where great old Westerns were filmed. Places known by Europeans in the German writer's classic book series Vinetou. We go to Mesa Verde and find ancient Indian villages inside canyon walls. This is a very special place with the Grand Canyon, seeing native indians and reservations in Nevada and Arizona, in a place special in the characteristics we know as the West, the world of cowboys and indians.

In the first stop upon arriving to Denver in the Summer, I recommend early September for this trip to the West because the heat is down. On the first day we may take a trip in the Rocky Mountains and visit the grave of Buffalo Bill. Then move into the mountains and in the same first day travel through the Rocky Mountain National park, and exit from the park not in Denver but in Boulder, located only some 20 miles from Denver, where one can sit outside in this outskirts place by the Rocky Mountains in a downtown shopping street, have dinner, eat ice cream and see the locals sitting around in a little downtown while also taking a trip to the University Complex located close to Boulder Downtown. Boulder put in place a restriction to allow growth, and keeps this place as a small quiet University town with students traveling about on bicycles. One sees people here in Boulder, people in the streets and there is also art and a lot of environmentalism connected with bike touring in the mountains, environmentalism is the world for this place, but also I would point out this would be a trip to a modern day American West, and this place is special in that regard that smoking is not allowed in these streets, a first in the country to ban smoking everywhere. As a tourist of course you don't know that so bring 500 dollars for being fined for trasspassing into Boulder with a lighted cigarette. This place is also filled with police keeping an eye on drinking as parties and smoking and festivities are likely in a University town which are not in the interest of the local police ran by the KKK. As in the 1930's the KKK took over running most political and Sheriff's offices in Colorado. Italians were watched by police as they drank wine, made their own wine and showed disrespect. Not much changed in this part of the world in that police culture where respect is the number one word representing Colorado and lifestyle, a respect bound to police control against Italian forms of ideas. Also smoking, as in Colorado Springs is banned inside cars. It is nice, because in this trip a tourist can feel watched, and there is no way to escape one form of fine or another during this trip to the West. When you park with a car, if the front of the car moves above the painted line separating the parking spot between cars, you will receive a fine. Many of the fines if not paid on the spot will come with an arrest, upon which a bail of $500 releases you and you will be ordered to appear in court some 6 weeks later. Since you are arriving as a tourist, you can be assured that the FBI finds you in your country, usually by banging at 4am on the door if you ignore the court. A person I know came to the USA, didn't pay the traffic violations, and they came to get him in a trasporto to Abu Ghraib fashion, agents banged on his door at night. Isn't that scary? You can't escape big brother. The United States acts pervasively in arresting those abroad who violate laws in the United States. In case of the person I know, he refused a trip in the car at night with the FBI agents and the Hungarian police was called out by the neighbors because there was a lot of yelling, and the police officers said the FBI has no rights to arrest a person in Hungary and sent the FBI away. The FBI investigated all things about this person, appeared at his work place and elsewhere. He couldn't believe it how the United States found him abroad. He rented a room in our apartment while I was in the United States. He came to the USA briefly because he joined Scientology and wanted to work in a cruise ship by the coast of Florida. Of course he received various other charges by the FBI for his arrest upon his return to Hungary, including a breakin attempt to NASA, where they followed his internet activities and saw him try entering a random login and password. He was a potential suspect after visiting the USA in all regards, and hopefully after this trip to the West you too can share the haunting feelings of this part of the World as my friend in Hungary did though he ended his journey in a nice cruise ship off of Florida where they took away his passport and locked him up in a dark room for two weeks and the Hungarian ambassador had to get involved in rescuing him out of Scientology. He found a cell phone and called in panick, said he is being locked up and in need of rescuing. The Hungarian Ambassador threatened Scientology about taking his passport and they gave him his passport back and let him go after signing papers that Scientology treated him well. One feels a sense of criminology haunting in the moment of entry. A lit up cigarette at the airport is dealt with within seconds, one feels the immensity of being watched. And sure, the USA is not so distant to Scientology that too aims to replace general healthcare with their solutions, and as that have tendencies to take over the world. Was Scientology involved in getting the FBI to arrest to hunt down and arrest my misguided friend in the middle of the dark night who dared to step into this world called the United States in any forms is a mystery. The criminology side in many ways binds Scientology and the USA is criminal pervasion of bounderless world takeover doctrimines under a criminal system, not government, or not yet evolved into government but driving black cars and snitching people mostly for crimes, or rather suspicions they didn't commit, while asking for help in a real crime in regards to the FBI comes with no responses. It's all secretive, and that's how Bush likes it. Google too comes with the tendency that all should take care of themselves, and like Bush who only believes in a replacement form of private healthcare, a replacement form of control in all forms finds a successful formula of money making. Google too was blamed by many that they intend to take over the world, while closing away behind policies and giving the ghostly sounds of ghost town winds in a facility where no one would guess there are 30 thousand employees are around, one feels such silence in facilities of 200 people working. Yes, in this trip to the West, we will visit the Google headquarters in the south tip of the San Francisco Bay in a San Francisco Bay Suburb Called Mountain View.

Some people are very sensitive in matters speaking of big brother, CIA (as was the case in the CCCP about any form of political expression), the CIA does come quick, and this trip is very special for what it is.

The West: The World of Fines and Trasspassings

Day 2: So after getting fined for various violations in the first day for numerous things, we move on to Colorado Springs on the second day with various violations cited on paper in the glove compartment. Remember, in the United States a tourist does not step out of the car and shake hands with a police officer or one can get shot. Here value of life is little, don't expect a police to realize he is dealing with tourists. Here police does not see anything. You age, even if you have gray hair will not matter. In Colorado Springs come to a movie theater and enjoy the moment of being asked for an ID for a Rated R movie. Here age is not understood, and retired people are asked for ID-s. This place loves documents and ID-s and police bangs on windows asking for them checking old people if they have drivers licenses and are old enough for driving. In a bar if a man is 80 years old, he will not get a drink without an ID. It's a lovely place to be in, an ID here is always present and one can wear it as a badge. In Denver one can still get a cigarette in a store or a drink if he looks older, but no drinks are allowed outside of facilities in porches as in Europe. Forget romantic Paris, sitting outside and having a Martini, forget romantic Rome and sightseeing. If you seem like a tourist and driving slow as you observe the more expensive homes, you can get arrested for cruising around. One must need special destination and papers to prove them that all driving in a Denver suburb is of clear purpose.

Colorado Springs has no anti-cruising laws, but has a nice ID orientation, even for rated R films ID-s are asked for from senior citizens. I have never in my life seen anything like this that represents Colorado Springs to have my ID asked for a Rated R movie, and wonder why are they so alien amongst each other as people, this is supposed to be a small town and bound with the police government in ways of people living in unity with the government as ultra-American ideology of curfews, real curfews, and restriction of group gatherings to three people. No gatherings allowed, as such gatherings are seen as political crime. A true sense of a Gestapo in presence, a repression of freedom and the older European visitor feels violated for giving his ID in a faceless world of mandations. The sense of a gentleman is not around in service and love but what counts is service and police, one so much reminding of the CCCP that does not care of age and personal rights, doesn't want to care of age but to ID a really really old man for a drink in front of all people in the bar and treat him like a 21 year old little shit. This world in this bar stems from the days of slavery where when one enters he sees people with strange looks seeking potential damage and the value of life is low. Impoliteness in terms of culture, humanity and basic education comes with the dark sides of police state minds who do not look at you as a person, but respect comes with the Sheriff, you are but a federal property as in a highly racist forms of politics these days know globally and mercilessly possessing and territorial and faceless, yet does it most personally and thoughtlessly violatingly as police in power and people taught to be bound with citizen policing in all corners, one is being watched. For no little reasons, Ceausescu adored the United States which is an ideal model for all dictators, but wants to be a model in Democracy and all other things in the World, and take over dictative role as leader and commander, patrol officer and line-walking citizens in a perfect community world divided between classes and ghettos. One raised in Europe learns that Ghettos are bad, but here ghettos are extended to high forms, and remain ghetto controlled, one that closely invites militia, radical extremism, and related mindsets. Colorado Springs is a retirement heaven for the military and also a center for the most conservative religious organizations, such as Focus on the Family. When a Swedish Ph.D student held a seminar in Colorado Springs at UCCS (University of Colorado, Colorado Springs) on what she felt she feels she would improve in the United States politically, men in black wearing wires rushed in and sent everybody home and one bullyboy American man told her: "If you don't like it here, why don't you just go back your own country", and that N word was missing there in the end which in 200 years they learned not to use and ban using it among the blacks who use it popularly. Howard Stern was fined 750 thousand dollars because the N word was heard in his show. That word is part cultural among black people, it is used in rap music, but white people only know to banned all rap music in places like Los Angeles. White people only know to take complete control and with it use police as forms of prejudice, but that will be seen in the last part of this trip to the West. Would white people ban any derogatory words toward white people? If black people ban it fine, but it is the white who ban it for all, while in no sense small on racist confrontations of police in power at home and abroad, safety compromises racism, a side that is known as corruption, however sensitivity and stereotype ideas set political grounds in this country where white is still most powerful in the religious life typical of colonist places, like in South Africa or Australia where tea is served and black African people or aboriginal bush people in Australia are aimed to be out-territorialized through racist genocides embedded deeply into the white man's politics to control manners of the natives, and yes, highly discriminatively and overly powerfully.

rakin to a colonist past that is so weirdly out of date.

I have no idea what I just said.

Is there a word: rakin?

It sounds like a word. To stick.

If you beep at someone in a car or pass on the highway in European fashion quickly and closely, you may be shot. This is the town where an old man shot a boy who wanted him to go faster when he was entering a highway in a one lane. The boy beeped at him and the old man hit the breaks on the one lane entrance. All happened so quickly. The 18 year old boy jumped out of his car, walked up to the car of the old man and was shot and killed instantly as he arrived. The old man in court was found not guilty of murder. In the newspapers he was shown as a sweet sensitive man who cried for what he did and the sentiment of the court went to him and not to the family of the boy who wanted to drive faster. In a place where matters of police win, killers run free, not young people in a hurry for a date in a movie theater because he had to run back home to get his id he needed to get into the theater and was running late for his date. "What's your problem, why did you stop me, he jumps out from the car and says I need to hurry!" (killed). In his own country, and declared a criminal for being in a hurry and being murdered. As in Texas, law now stands to allow killing people for so called self defence and those committing such murders are let free of charge. The old man got angered, scared, and used a gun in self defence. Back to life in 1802 in a Saloon where murders go unpunished and accepted as necessary when the Sheriff agrees. Barbarism. The old man was found to carry a long list of enemies, license plates collected of fast drivers.

Forget romance, sightseeing in Rome. Abide to the law enacted by citizens, away from the world, as in days of slavery, a brutal past and a vicious presence in the precious present, offering a present, a bullet in justified forms of first class citizenry, accepted as norm, racious prejudice and it's abnormal rule of power stemming to ancient conservatism where all serve the police and it's belief system, and not a traveled opinion... but let's forget monstocities of cultures that aim to present their identity with police, and the vicious repression that such an identity of power can create, as simple as that, and move on with our trip.

If you are still alive on the second day escaping a self-declared citizen policeman of the highways, and there are a lot of self-declared policemen in Colorado, with guns, I mean how weird is this place. Imagine old people walking around with guns in Europe, they would be straight out of the Gestapo era, and an old man angered with a gun, seeking trouble as he is collecting such people's licence plate numbers is running a one man Rambo operation in puruit of making a change once and for all to rid Colorado of European style drivers and his mission was accomplished and he went home, returned from the war that he himself declared with millions of others understanding him, and his murder became 1 in a 17 thousand cases of murders that take place in the United States arrogantly and many of these are claimed out of self defence. Depends where one grows up, things can appear as deadly dangerous and people turn to use guns, even when in the eyes of people in other countries the situation presents a horrific insanity, but such insanity is seen as a different matter in this part of the world. And that matter is not seen friendly to a Hungarian, or to a Bulgarian or to a Nigerian. They turn to feel sorry for the old man and understand him, others, and probably most others turn to feel sorry for the young kid. But here, in this part of the world, you are deprived of your human rights and must feel that an id is what makes a person in this part of the world. And this man's id is his gun and feelings others are taught to feel, the court that relates to this man as a place militantly seeking it's hardcore militancy in power that aims to clense all streets and return a deep hardcore conservacy where police is watching the streets and certain citizens can feel they achieved what they wanted. Fascism. Barbarism. Military police state. Big brother in power, united by the power of the United States as world leader and the more the conspiracy with hardcore as with the Pakistani leader, the more the unification of police in power and a replacement mechanism, call it inquisition serving all of Bush's interests that does not stop, and declares a course that will be taken to the end while it discards all racism that it itself produces as hard line fanatics of military power.

In the past people were able to travel without racism, now one is confronted with prejudice based on skin, and the US president was not impeached as Hitler with whom not even his second hand officers dared to disagree with. Europe led human rights after World War II, conquered the CCCP and Ceausescu's fascism (officially Communism, but he happened to drop in as a fascist minded dictator who loved the USA and went for the fascist extreme to wipe out all traditional culture for a super power. Ceausescu ran a private relation where he, his wife and relatives themselves ran all departments in the government and treated Romania as a private housing project, a pet project).

Bush too has been accused of running a pet project, ignoring racism as a result of cultural violations in a course taken to the end fashion. Given military confrontation with the USA is not any country's choice, the situation dealing with a military aggression of this scale is taking it's own course and burden where ID and internal conspiracies claim all political decisions and not things fourth graders can see as blind and wrong, wrong politically, weak humanly, arrogant as Hitler in not listening to any opinions and using iron of a regime to spend half a trillion on a war while regusing to spend a few millions on improving healthcare for children in the USA. Yes, it comes down to the simple realization that Bush believes in a private healthcare for all, and as a classic cult believes in a replacement of general healthcare, and as that carries tendencies to take over the world and threat that the course will be taken to the end regardless and not see that Hitler too was blinded in his leadership and took the course to two hours before his capture by the Soviet army ending the World War as they made their way in to Berlin, as someone must have given out the information to the bunker systems, I imagined a German officer telling Hitler that fighting from underneath in the bunkers will not work as they know all hiding places now. I imagine Hitler shooting that German officer who told him this final information that there is no escape and called him a coward who does not want to fight and shot him again. Then slowly it all emerged in his head and he sat down. He got married in his final two hours and committed a double homicide–suicide with his newlywed love and that ended the steakout and massacre of 3 million Jews led by his interest of replacing all culture with elements of dictatorial statues and dull giant stadium–like government buildings in a world appealing to him where cameras are in place and all people are watched and Jews and others killed by citizens with special permits and the alienation can continue under German supremacy over all others, even over the United States. Hitler asked Mexico to launch war against the United States, upon which Germany returns the Southern States to Mexican property. Since Germany lost, Southern states owned by Germany became American property. Colorado has German speaking regions and residents in the mountainous villages who speak German, but I am not a historian and don't know the exact history of why people come to such barbarian ideals in regards to power, and why racism is gone ignored as not crime and as necessary matters. Because such corruptions form in circles of highest powers. Such corruptions remove the element of justifying racism as a crime and sit as a system of replacement that entails a different story to what it perceives as racism and corruption, as safety is most important. So if safety compromises racism, it must be a necessary approach that is justified as not racism but as a problem of as Soros said: us and them misunderstandings. Soros complained of us and them being a problem that he remembered seeing in times of World Wars. George Soros, self made billionaire on the stock market lived through two world wars and spent a life donating billions for the advancement of Democracy around the World and funded educational advancements.

He was perceived as highly honorable in European countries, particularly in his work in Democracy during communism, but was called a drug lord with his money by top Republican politicians when he tried to reach out about his concerns to Americans at a time before the reelection of President George W. Bush. George Soros sent out two million letters to mostly Republican voters in an attempt to raise awareness to a wrong inner policies, and asked for an apology from the Republican leader calling him a drug lord. He never received an apology.

Throughout history there were two powers in barbaric settings: Kingdom and Religion. Bush arised as forms of rulerships, powers, governments. Religion arised as the one and only form of government before Kings, and Kings as brutal vicious forms of governments. A Democracy replaces both forms of governments by declaring that the government belongs to the people. Colorado has a Democratic constitution and declaration, unlike the constitution of the United States which does not mention the word Democracy not once and is what it is, among other things it preserves Guns in sacred religious forms, makes it an untouchable issue in the second Ammendment while gun control became a top priority to ban as forms of barbarisms in other countries where human rights and value of life is considered important. As a result in highly barbaric cultures as in Japan, today murder is very rare and Japan is among the world's most peaceful places. Greece is the world's most peaceful place with murders counting around 30 a year. Tony Blair rose to high popularity and presidency when he banned all weapons in England after a school shooting, and while England is horrible in regards to caring about privacy and running Orwell cameras claiming as Google that it is the same if there is a camera or if a person sees it. We have read Orwell, thought about Ceausescu's idea of police cameras and I believe there is a sensitivity to those things. But don't ask the british, they are already half convinced that such cameras are the same thing if there was a policeman seeing the same thing with his own eyes. Ancient barbarism of imperialistic minds of repression, Gandhi drove out the long socks and pride british, kick them in the balls for a lack of sharing and undertaking, an orientation of police being above the public, and such mentality not taking life with a value perspective but with a big Capitalist and inquisiting form of domination. The UK after all would be the country that would present the leader of the world image with the World Bank and other central power establishments, while Switzerland holds the secret investments of criminals in high power. Ceausescu kept his money in secret in Switzerland, some 900 million dollars in a private bank account in 1989, when that money truly made him one of the richest people in the World at the time. Of course Ceausescu laundered that money off of Romania, basically stole it from the government accounts. With such man in power, a country in private hold in all regards and all departments running under his relatives, where he himself is listed as managing 30 departments, life must be enjoyable in a Castle where the toilet itself had a device installed to report any health problems in the stool. Wouldn't you want to pee and find out your cholesterol and calories and... I mean where do they make these toilets? Maybe it's one of those Drakula stories claiming he drank blood of people, and slept in a coffin.

Popular stories arise at times when such leaders are sitting by their desk, writing silently, and outside in the hall men stand motionlessly by the walls while Ceausescu's only interests all relate to matters of security, which made him pretty much into, you know what, into a dictator! Who drinks blood of people! Kill him with a silver stick through the heart, the only way such horror dies. He was shot by a brick wall with his wife right after court where he received a crimes against humanity sentencing, shot by an execution squad, but did they use silver bullets at least? With him the well trained citizen police died, they turned into black bats and then into dust, and on December 25, 1989 the era ended and soon Moscow too fell from it's iron curtain, iron curtain which is now once again saught as necessary ingredient for a new Superpower by Putin. He is highly popular among Russians as many see a Superpower as an idea that will bring a lot of money, while Putin didn't miss a chance to reintroduce the Superpower and threat the USA of a nuclear destruction if they build up their defences and military curtain against Iran in East Europe. Putin said he will point nukes once again at US bases in East Europe, setting a stage for places that took too much from being pet projected between the East and the West, now once again caught in, I don't know the words, between racism and and some new racism in the making. The USA ignored all of Putin's words as if he is air and went ahead with the plans to build up even more military now in East Europe. Whose gonna stop nuclear weapons, are you crazy? One day the craziness is going to pay off. Really, all of Bush's projects are corruption of racism, black people know in the USA that racism is not fun. Safety is compromising racism and that is not allowed. The USA is now very bad, even among Democrats as none are up to confronting Bush. Even Europe who did when honoring Bush with a crimes against humanity sentence was denied by Washington and Bush said the USA does not torture. You can't dismiss such crimes, really. Sure Bush wouldn't torture, but the world is not like that. To Bush it's just another problem, to a real politician he would at least resign when his country commits atrocities. Even Nixon resigned when they found out that the offices of Democratic leaders were wiretapped by Republican leaders closely tied with the CIA. Bush would never resign, he takes control of all departments, he himself crosses out pictures of wanted and killed terrorists, he himself pays bounty hunters. Imagine if leaders in other countries would pay bounty hunters in other countries to kill people. Imagine if North Korea would send hitmen whom bush pays, paying thugs, assassins around the world for a military regime that acts before proving, that racistly creates circumstances as framing Iraq with terrorism, while not one Iraqi citizen ever having killed an American citizen before, then saying: Can't leave, as the terrorists would then come to the USA. It doesn't add up. Bush is creating a racist provocation. How would you feel if you were designated as a potential terrorist? Yes, it is a skin problem of the ideas. Bush doesn't care to verify his claims, he promised revenge for what Osama did to the families of the WTC victims on the first anniversary of 9/11, and on grounds of revenge he receives supporters. He went after Saddam, his father's greatest enemy. It became a family business.

The don't own people and public assets, they lease.

Garden of the Gods park once had an owner, the park located in Colorado Springs, it is one of the most beautiful places on Earth. The owner donated the park to the city and left it in his will that nobody can own this park.

Lida Hill, daughter of the Hunt Ketchup Giant in Texas didn't come to own this park, but to lease it.

Her villa sits in the best view on a hill to this park and she pervased the city to allow her to run the park's business. With millions of visitors she built a giant visitor center with restaurants and removed a large portion of the park for parking spaces. She now runs tour busses and other business in an exchange of having the city not have to pay for park maintenance. A business move in to a park that is a national treasure. A business move in like Google onto a property that belongs to all like books in Libraries and commercially profit on this asset.

In other ventures in Colorado Springs, Lida Hill purchased a land where there was a 1000 year old tree and she wanted to replace it with a building that was planned there. Protesters in the city surrounded the tree, but constructions came in the middle of the night when nobody was there and removed the tree the next day. Such quick decisions and undertakings of a park also happened and a lot of protesters wanted to preserve the park from giant constructions involving a new very large visitor center taking a huge place at the entrance of the park. The prior visitor center was hidden in the park in a way that it was not visible in photographs and people enjoyed the nature there. The new visitor center was risen right in the entrance in front of the most beautiful natural formations of rocks, in front of the Kissing Camels. No, they don't own it, they lease it, as Google it becomes an owner of one of the world's treasures in a day, without contracts or votes, it comes to possess and control and validate the wish of the person who left the park as one that cannot have an owner. No, this company leases the park, well, in a permanent form. One agreement where lawyers pervaded the city's government for this deal as Google pervaded the greatest libraries at the most prestigious Universities to allow access to all the books for copying them. Taking over a national asset or of a historical collection of books from the largest library collections obviously carries value. Financial interests seek national and other treasures. Google is known to be a pirate institution that inquires public properties for building search engines over them with corresponding ads that fund Google. Google wants to index all things in the world and the pirate on national scale treasures. Sure there is money, but anti-piracy laws protect copyright and profiting on copyrighted properties. Aside the copyright, Google launched a mass scale copyright of books.

You can't buy it, then lease it. An old American invention. To purchase all copyright would cost much more money than what Google could ever come up with, so go ahead and take it, falsify it and continue falsifying the truth, build up an army of lawyers. Sure it was lawyers on top of Lida Hill's takeover operation of the park. The owner of the park clearly left it in his will that there can be no owner. So she gets the park for free. What a marvelous idea. How much could a national park cost anyway? It can have no price. And Google too, got the books for free. Google didn't even lease the books. They took them for profit. Stolen works of arts and humanities are recognized crimes against humanity, while there is nothing on taking national treasures in a business between a business and government. There are so many rich people in the United States, and practically owning a national park with night lights from Lida Hill's backyard lighting up the Kissing Camels and running the whole national park's business for profit must truly make her feel she is the owner of this park. She first moved there, the best spot of a private property, built a country club with visitors on her property facing the national park, and then she came up with the idea to take over running the whole park's business, and profiting from every bit of this business as if she was the owner of this park, in exchange of a deal that the city would not need to pay any more to maintain this park and it's visitor center, and the visitor center comes important now as it is the source of money and it came as a giant complex to the entrance of this natural park.

Bush is into country clubs and into ideas of privatizing government and leasing out national treasures. Yes, this private visitor center is not a simple wooden one hidden in a park where people find it by following signs as they entered a national park, but stands with tour busses and business ventures and large restaurants and with a massive parking lot in the heart of a place that when I first saw it I felt like picking up a paintbrush and paint it. This place was also a religious place for native indians who come here to perform religious ceremonies, it is called the Garden of the Gods. Now a park lighted up at night from the backyard of a private owner with very very strong lights into the distance right at the Kissing Camels and money to pay the electricity for those stadium lights, while rich people are accomodated in this private home and country club formation over the park located on the top of a hill. I don't even want to ask if I can build a home by a national park and use stadium lights to light up a beautiful place in that national park, then take over running the business of that park for free of charge and destroy a large portion of the natural atmosphere in the park to build a giant visitor center and cut down 1000 year old trees when the protesters are not around and not worry about Democracy and humanity and national treasures and world collection of books and history and wills of other people. I came to a conclusion long time ago that evil is the children of very rich people. Like Bush Sr. wasn't evil, evil arises from a child whose parents are extremely rich. Maybe not in all cases. I met people, fairly young whose parents are very very rich, and I couldn't talk with them like with other people. I had a breakdown of how air they saw me as. I had a business meeting with them and then we went to dinner, I came home with a breakdown. They were pure evil as people. They couldn't relate to a human being and had giant ideas in terms of money and they wanted me to do everything and get 1/3000ths of the company's share, a company of 10 people. Of how they see people as nothing was incredible. The two owners had 1000 shares each, I would get one to be the only software engineer, and they would start the company. One share, two years of work, all the work of the company and that was their deal, and all their behavior was that I am just air, and they are the owners of this software company that they invented. The other people in the company are hired with more than 10 shares. Of course no money for two years, no pay, and one share. I kept fighting them for hours about what it means facelessness. I shouldn't have even bothered with having a nervous breakdown about facelessness of people who see others as air. They basically lease me according to their plans. Lease me for free, and then get rid of me and I walk away with one share. They received investment money that they already spent, or something like that was spooky. I looked in their eyes and they were looking at air and pure air. Kids of rich people, evil, and I am not into evil in the sense it is on TV. A person from Europe would say human rights problems of how people relate in regards to foreigners and what they are willing to consider theirs. But the light is out in these people and reflected on other things. Such looks in the eyes probably existed in days of slavery. I was dieing when I was around these two people. Of course I said no to the idea, but it was much more painful because something very basic was missing and yes, the dollar was in their eyes but how in terms of 1/3000ths of the company of 10 people and not even paying a salary or anything. Doesn't matter. The guy who wrote DOS for the IBM contract at Microsoft is the second richest person at Microsoft. You write the company's product, they are not supposed to treat you as a 1/3000ths. Never mind. I just remember a shock I had once when I met two kids whose parents are very rich and they started a business. I had panic attacks when I came home that day of how they are always the rich and what others become to them, I couldn't take it, they were not humans. Sitting there for hours, discussing a deal, and I am just a foreigner, no matter what. The only way to understand it is to be there and see the eyes of emptiness by two men and I kept wanting to reach out that there is a person here and they kept ignoring all my words as if they were in a holodeck program, and they continued their discussion and I was like: hello, hello, I am here, I have ideas, I can make this program in a way that I would also be interested in joining this business. And when I was there as a person and they weren't no matter what, a person goes crazy as if this would not even be this world but one is amongst another species who resemble humans and they are very much in regards to their species, it creates an inner loop, of chaos. Do you know that feeling that you are not with humans? These two kids grew up in places like Country Clubs where their very rich parents used to go to. They see the world in a different realm, they were sent to Yale and Harvard by their parents and are raised to become giant enterprenours, but like Bush Jr. who when received an oil company from his father crashed the whole company and these people are not there with eyes but with a lifelong perception that creates a huge gap of how they see the world, not as equal. And then they presented me this huge gap. On paper and forms and with a few of their already joined members. I am one. He is 10. We, 1000. Maybe it's that simple. There is nothing more and none can break it. I am one. He is 10. We, 1000.

How much would Kim Jong Il be in North Korea? When encountering such an immense layout where I am one, it is very horrifying. Rich people will always start at the top. It was a very sick experience. I couldn't take it. I was having a breakdown for many days, but I realized, with numbers one can find a way of reaching out to Borg. Dude. they paid for the dinner... no, they didn't. What's the opposite of dude. Pure air. Molecule. With good business, at least as in the beginning of Microsoft, you are doing interesting things. No, maybe Bill Gates sat down: "I, one 10 million shares, you people one share each. No coding without permission." Maybe he cathe public and robberies of arts and humanities. We are here to see and to protest and promote an innocent until proven guilty world that is forgotten as in the never ending story. Your homework in this trip is to find out what we would become if we were to remove all power. You are only not crazy because you are part of the stereotype that can grow to murder the world as a collective, why is individuality a pain in the ass. If you own an apartment, do you need to ban dogs to poor families? Who invented these designation rules in a fashion that spread accross all apartments in the United States in banning all house pets? So now people don't rent but lease these places? Let them rent. Let people live their own lives. It's an easy concept of not setting your example on others but giving life a chance.

It was going to be John Lennon's and Paul McCartney's next song: "Giving life a chance. Letting people be. Let the little girl, have a nice puppy. Let it be, let it be, let it be, let it be, imagine all the people, having chance, in their life. Letting people be. Imagine a world without blackgovernment and no riot helmets too, when people are dining with family, they deserve no government watch, let it be, let it be, imagine how it all could be,"

Safety safety in all things, what for. Let's pull up the red Russian flag and drink vodka. I hope nobody minds.
I drink mine with lime. Last time a cousin of mine drank vodka with lime he sent a seed so high in the air, anyway
I have a pre-Sumerian story of a caveman named Promoteus.
You are going to enjoy this one. While everybody worked, Promoteus stayed in the cave, just sat all day and kept rubbing two sticks of wood together. Nobody understood what he was doing. One day upon everybody's giant surprise, Promoteus lit up a fire with the two sticks. Everybody was amazed, so amazed when they saw the fire, they all decided to celebrate with a giant party to this event. One man asked: Cool, a party, but who are we going to eat? Another man commented: Hmm, it must be somebody who is not useful for anything. Everybody looked toward Ancient Promoteus. There is a famous Russian song that was written on behalf of this story where the cavemen stayed up partying all night and ate Ancient Promoteus. "Promoteus Promoteus, Ancient, Promoteus. Disco beats!" The bus driver inserted the cassette and drank vodka and saw a police car watching drivers by the road. Don't defend, don't attack, what's wrong with these people. Defend defend defend. We all speak english. Foreigners speak English. Promoteus promoteus, ancient, promoteusss!
