

Re: SHELL Oil chief admits CO2 output rate is very worrying

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.econ/2004-06/1263.html>

From: Angelo Campanella (a.campanella_at_att.net)

Date: 06/22/04

Date: Tue, 22 Jun 2004 12:30:54 GMT

Robert J. Kolker wrote:

> Best of all, if feasible, is geothermal heat. We have a heat source

Look into the south African gold mine tunneling temperature problems. There is so much geothermal heat they must contend with, that if it were not for immense air-conditioning air pumped down to them, they would immediately perish.

> already in place radiating and conducting its energy away. Why not tap into it, if we can. We probably have enough energy there for a hundred million years, and we will be extinct long before that.

Find the facts, then project this into heat sources anywhere on earth.

Angelo Campanella