

Re: Laffer Curve

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.econ/2004-07/0146.html>

From: Johnny Marcos (johnny5_at_yahoo.com)

Date: 07/03/04

Date: Sat, 03 Jul 2004 14:16:05 GMT

The Trucker <mikcob@verizon.net> wrote in news:cc52ot0253c@news3.newsguy.com:

> The voters have a very difficult time changing any of this because the > TwoParty holds a virtual monopoly on information. I do not mean that > people cannot find the facts if they really work at it, (although > under the Bush regime this is becoming more and more difficult) but > the information most people receive is from the tube and that > information is almost always slanted in favor of those who are in > control and want to stay in control.

Look, the main policy issue for me was someone stopping all this illegal immigration and preserving the value of my citizenship – they both pissed that away so I have to agree with Michael Moore – the rich get 2 parties and the rest of us get none.

> It is virtually impossible to run a successful campaign for a seat in > the US House of Representatives without first securing major funding > from special interests.

Ok so the system is broke, everything is going to collapse – how are you individually preparing? Are you gonna buy bullets like another poster on this forum is going to do to prepare for the coming civil war?

That might be OK for the senate, but the > House was to represent the common people and the number of persons > represented by each member of the House was to be on the order of 30 > thousand. If constituency sizes were held at 30 thousand instead of > being allowed to swell to 600 thousand (about 426 thousand voters), > then an honest and forthright individual truly representative of the > people in his district might be able to run a successful campaign > WITHOUT special interest money.

In my studies of anthropology – small societies culturally similar – racially similar – they have a good cohesion – but as our country grew and grew our political system did not adapt and it just is a house of cards I have been told. I agree – one person cannot represent the issues of 600K voters – that is an impossibility. The tower of Babel

sci.econ: Re: Laffer Curve had to be knocked down and its people dispersed – this was probably an effective way to distribute the people and bring some sense of representation back to the people. How do you propose we spread the pe