Says you ... and I disagree with your premise.

"for profit" is the only way such a beast can be successful.

I gave you the argument into another message. Let keep it short.
The interests diverge fundamentally. Is not like in food where more food means more profit but is in reverse less coverage means more profits.

You never gave ANY argument valid, except libertarian BELIEF. Well, Indians
believe in cow and maybe you can find some African or Amazonian tribes worshiping earth worms :-)

How's your "not-for-profit" retirement system doing? Social Security.
Doing well and projected to do well far into the future? NOT!

A lot of money were "borrowed" i.e hijacked from SS. And there are artificial limits like the 90k cap. A small reform will make the system sustainable for very very long.

And how many "small reforms" will you need along the way

Re: Health insurance

to the ultimate screwing of the american taxpayer that you call "universal healthcare" need?

No thanks -- I'm fine on my own. Don't need your help.

How's your current "not-for-profit" healthcare doing? Medicare, Medicaid? Doing real well, I hear. NOT!

Healthy and young people pay dividends to shareholders in private insurance companies. When old and sick is supported by tax payers.

Which is wrong, wrong, wrong.

With a universal health care system, instead of paying dividends to greedy criminals these extra money will support old and sick. Bingo, we get less taxes too.

50 million people. How much is that going to cost?

The fact that we do not have everybody in Medicare/Medicaid create these problems. We waste money to make some lazy idiots richer.

You waste money on long-term, underfunded government programs that have promised the impossible dream " Hey! We'll just live off everyone else's money, and we won't have to worry about providing for ourselves". This is (a) thievery/looting (b) a complete destruction of something that should be extremely important to every american citizen -- but sadly is not -- we call it "personal responsibility" (c) simply unsustainable in the long term and (d) will ultimately lead to the complete collapse of the economy, and along with it, the federal government as we know it today. Kiss your constitution good-bye -- it will never be back once it's gone.

These unfundable ponzi systems will ultimately result in the complete and utter collapse of the U.S. economy.

Add another under the name "universal healthcare", and you'll just hasten the demise.

Wine is good but it make your judgement bad :-)

I prefer an 18 yr old single-malt scotch.
