

Re: Does Outsourcing Piss you off?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.econ/2006-03/msg00025.html>

- From: "Jim Blair" <jeb@xxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 3 Mar 2006 15:09:35 -0600
-

"nosпам" <nospam@xxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message
news:MsKdnWbYkYE-yGbenZ2dnUVZ_sidnZ2d@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Sgt.Sausage wrote:

Forgetting the "cheating on the homework" aspect (which is an unrelated argument that I agree with you on -- the guy's a schlepprock), the dude

is correct. Outsourcing is natural, obvious, and common-sense to anyone running a business in a capitalist system.

Here is the big difference between micro and macro economics.
At microeconomic level (a business) yes. It does make a whole lot of sense to do just like that.

However, at macroeconomic level the situation is different.
If too many businesses are actually doing it, the consumer income decrease.

Hi,

You are not being "macro" enough. Because of his better paying job, that guy in India or China now has also become a consumer.

Overall "consumer income" has increased because of the higher combined productivity of both the American who gets more done with his time, and the Indian who is contributing to the Global economy rather than subsistence farming or whatever he was doing before being hired by schlepprock.

.....

Once this point is reached, the economy would be in big big trouble and everybody is going to get hurt. Including the businesses which take the advantage of outsourcing to increase their profits today.

Re: Does Outsourcing Piss you off?

If that were the case it would have happened decades (eons?) ago when people first started "outsourcing" their work to others.

_____ooo__(_O O_)__ooo_____

()

jim blair (jeblair@xxxxxxx) Madison Wisconsin USA.

This message was brought to you using biodegradable binary bits, and 100% recycled bandwidth. For a good time call: <http://www.geocities.com/capitolhill/4834>

.