So yeah, I am confident that at that time the ideology was still strongly believed and hopes fueled motivation.

With all that hope, nothing, not even genocide in the millions can stop you!

Of course. The human are motivated to do something either by a immediate reward either in the hope of a later reward.
And yes, sometimes people react late to a problem.

Ever heard of a tautology?

No, it is not a tautology at all. It is just the reality.
People act on a hope. It is enough to look at Wall Street to see people acting on pure hopes, and something even delaying some obviously decisions due to a hope. Just look around and understand.

In the end it is again about motivation. Free market in
