

Re: Free Market Anti-Statism

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.econ/2007-07/msg00093.html>

- From: darncat7@xxxxxxxxxx
 - Date: Tue, 24 Jul 2007 19:17:46 -0700
-

On Jul 24, 10:25 am, radav <ra...@xxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

IN PRAISE OF THE FREE MARKET

The free market is the wonder of the world. Millions of transactions for products; goods, merchandise, commodities; take place continuously from across the street to across the continents. These are peaceful, voluntary exchanges, usually through the medium of money, in which there is a perceived mutual benefit. There is an old cliché which is worth considering, that "where goods do not cross boundaries armies will."

In the long history of mankind, what has clearly distinguished the human from the animal is trading, exchanging, or buying and selling a variety of merchandise. The development of markets has mirrored the progress from barbarism to civilization.

If free market is really that magical, some society would have achieved economic utopia long time ago. Take a look at the following article to see why its power could have been vastly exaggerated:

<http://www.prudentbear.com/articles/show/2070>

.