Mindlessly silly.

It is so simple, really.

Nope.

You'd have to be willfully ignorant if you are an academic economist – which means fundamental economics is your SCIENCE AND YOUR LIFE – not to notice the obvious.

We'll see...

Trade, in products and services, is clearly a good thing. No need to go into that.

Yes.

However not all trade is necessarily a good thing,

Yes. We did eventually decide that the trade in humans was a tad undesirable.

Only took a few millennia.

and that's where modern academics already falls off the cliff of knowledge.

We'll see...

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

In general, you trade in what you make, then the system of trade works.

Thanks for that completely superfluous proof that you have never ever had a fucking clue about anything at all, ever.

Hordes of trade is about whatever you can find, whether that is minerals, food, animals, plants etc etc etc.

But what about trade in things you do not make ? Such as: the Earth.

Tad hard to trade that, its not very portable and there arent too many can pay what its worth.

Even Martians dont appear to be too interested in buying it for some odd reason.

What about the problematic effect that for-profit money investment has: it is most profitable when the workers are denied as much as possible their rightful share of profit.

No such animal as that last.

To cut through the whole theoretical economics, which though interesting in principle is probably only going to be boring for most people, here is the activities we need to change (conclusions from true economics theory as briefly hinted at above, not the lies and ignorant deceptions academia has spread throughout the world):

We'll see...

– Land. Land all concentrated under a Government gives Government a lot of power, which is not necessarily a good thing.

No such animal.

You quite sure you aint one of those rocket scientist silly little pig ignorant children ?

Land can be distributed though, and trade in land can be restricted to lease contracts (which, by the way, is what the Torah law also does, like it or not.)

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Who cares ? The world has moved on just a tad from that.

– Money. To cut away the problem-effect noted above, money needs to be invested not bleakly for its own profit, but with "good goals" in mind.

Soorree, fresh out of magic wands to wave to achieve that.

How to force that principle into the investment system:
the most obvious way is a truly democratic state,

No such animal.

paired with an active population

Soorree, most americans are too obese for that.

who is motivated to take care of itself and its economy.

Which is, actually.

Another obvious source is "good causes," people who have organized and donate money for the sake of making their economy / community a better place for everyone.

No such animal.

These two things can complement each other,

Nope.

and there is even a business model possible there, which can – paradoxically – be profitable (for services rendered, not for money sucked out).

Pity it doesnt work for long.

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

– Government. For above mentioned investment scheme, the Government needs to be democratic, without holding back.

No such animal.

The right-wing will lose, the left will win, and then we can forget about party-politics altogether.

Only in your pathetic little drug crazed fantasyland.

– Businesses. For the trade mechanism to work, it must be dynamic.

Then goose it with cattle prods.

There must be new and free upstarts possible, to fill in where new markets emerge and become profitable.

Try that again in english.

Although a free enterprise system demands freedom, a business already established and breaking away from its starter should fall under another economic principle: you own your own work.

There is a hell of a lot more involved than just your own work, child.

If you own your own work, you can trade it in freedom.

Wrong, as always.

That is what a trade economy means: you own your own work.

Wrong, as always.

That means a company (of significant size at least) that loses its starter, should come to "own itself."

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

You'll end up completely blind if you dont watch out, child.

This will create a fair and just (normal) labor trade for company management.

Wrong, as always.

No longer the insider trade between greedy investors,

What about the non greedy investors, child ?

the starters they chose to fund, and the non-starter take-over company owners (sometimes the share-holder vampires themselves).

Vampires isnt a verb, child.

But the employees simply attract company leaders that they trust,

Is that right ?

and the employees decide the pay-rate.

Corse none of those will decide to pay themselves far more than they are actually worth, eh ?

Because it is their production, they own their own work, and will share part of that in return for adequate management functions.

Then there's the real world, outside you silly little drug crazed fantasys, child.

I think in the new system business managers will actually feel a lot better, too.

Not a shred of evidence that you are actually capable of thought, child.

The antagonism is more or less gone (I hope).

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Re: Capitalism is a half-truth, Marxism is the opposite half-truth

Hope springs eternal...

It is more "us against the competition," or "us for the costumers," instead of "the boss and bank against the employees," and "the ruling classes and their right-wing political whores and deceptive media against the People and Justice itself."

You'll end up completely blind if you dont watch out, child.

Quit your love of ignorance.

Go and fuck yourself.

Don't think you can win, you're already beaten.

Its your dick you have beaten red raw, child.

In the end, whatever happens, the truth always wins.

Is that right, child ?

If not by making things right, then by laughing from the side when things go wrong. haha ha.

Gone blind yet, child ?

Let's forget about the ignorant past, and work for a better tomorrow today.

Lets not.

If not, you'll a pay the price for sitting on your hands when action was called for, by continuing to leave this beautiful world in the hands of who currently has it in its power

Looks like another premature ejaculation, child.
