

Re: Where To Buy Emergency Stop Buttons?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.basics/2004-12/1660.html>

From: Art (plotsligt_at_comcast.net)

Date: 12/29/04

Date: Wed, 29 Dec 2004 04:59:22 -0500

Could easily use tac pushbutton switches and produce you own custom made button. Sounds as if you may be an avid hobbyist, this would not be extremely difficult to produce with the appropriate tools.

"PSurfliner" <LunarBrass@socal.rr.com> wrote in message news:1104309773.556319.36180@f14g2000cwb.googlegroups.com...

>I am very sorry but I did not make my intentions clear. I am looking > for low price shutoff switches for a personal project that I am working > on where nobody's safety is actually in danger. These "emergency" stop > buttons, and I use the term loosely, could shut off a set of model > trains when a person is not near enough to the throttles after a > derailment. A very easy shutoff system to add and would be very useful > if I could get the some large red buttons that would be easy to hit > immediately.

>

> Thanks!

>