

Re: How to ask for help on s.e.b

---

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.basics/2006-11/msg00000.html>

---

- From: Rich Grise <rich@xxxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Tue, 31 Oct 2006 17:35:11 GMT
-

On Sun, 29 Oct 2006 17:41:05 +0000, Michael A. Terrell wrote:

robb wrote:

"PeteS" <peter.smith8380@xxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote in message

There have been a number of posts recently where the OP wanted answers to incredibly simple questions. To help those, I reproduce here the s.e.b. template for 'no-thinkers', taken from a.e.e

who U call simple U f-head, U shouldn't be allowed to reproduce.... why do U not take U'r smarmy azz'd acronym-arsed f-headed ideas back to groopler goops no-thought required just do it if you got this far .... that was just a joke, because on groups it is not always obvious

if you could get your form into 3 lines ( the attention span of groupers ) then i would say good idea, i suspect those who would type such well thought and polite messages would have the skills (i.e. patience) to research teir dire problems to a simple solution are there simple questions ?

Yes, and even simpler minds. They go to Google, yet they can't figure out how to use a search engine. It would make their tiny mind explode, so they post a vague, stupid question. Then they get mad when people don't kiss their ass. We should just post the link to the Google search engine and tell them to come back when they know what they really want to ask. NO MORE 20 QUESTIONS!

What's this "We should" crap? I've been doing that for years, and getting crap for it.

Re: How to ask for help on s.e.b

Thanks,
Rich

.