

Re: I'm a republican and I'm voting for Kerry

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2004-09/2955.html>

From: John Larkin (jjlarkin_at_highSNIPlandTHIStechPLEASEnology.com)

Date: 09/14/04

Date: Tue, 14 Sep 2004 09:38:52 -0700

On Tue, 14 Sep 2004 07:15:42 +0100, John Woodgate <jmw@jmwa.demon.contrasпам.yuk> wrote:

>I read in sci.electronics.design that Chris Carlen <crobc@BOGUS_FIELD.ea >rthlink.net> wrote (in <4ys1d.531\$Y65.381@newsread1.news.pas.earthlink.n >et>) about 'I'm a republican and I'm voting for Kerry', on Tue, 14 Sep >2004:

>

>>Unfortunately I don't think the Democrats can make the country better >>either. I have reached the point where I am convinced that both of the >>two major political philosophies are inadequate to provide the guidance >>needed to society.

>

>I hope that there aren't too many Americans who share your feelings. If >there are, US is ripe for a political take-over by a popular demagogue, >probably from the extreme right, similar to Mussolini or Hitler. You >have been warned.

If you get past the responses to the provocatively-worded and absurdly quantized polls, and really talk to people, most Americans rate themselves very happy with their lives, families, and jobs. The politics is sort of a sport, actually. Some people are angry and discontent, and they tend to concentrate on newsgroups.

John