I read in sci.electronics.design that Nicholas O. Lindan <see@sig.com> wrote (in <8fGwd.2399\$Z47.2174@newsread2.news.atl.earthlink.net>) about 'Christmas vs "Holidays"', on Fri, 17 Dec 2004:

- > "Then he took his contradictions out
- > And he splashed them on my brow
- > So which words was I then to doubt
- > When choosing what to vow
- > Should I choose them all--should I make them mine
- > The sermons, the hymns and the valentines
- > And he asked for truth and he asked for time
- > And he asked for only now
- > Now the trials are trumpet scored
- > Oh will we pass the test
- > Or just as one loves more and more
- > Will one love less and less
- > Oh come let's run from this ring we're in
- > Where the Christians clap and the Germans grin
- > Saying let them lose, crying let them win
- > Oh make them both confess" -- Joni Mitchell

Is that from one of the gibberish passages in the Bible? Looks like one of the inferior psalms.

The good news is that nothing is compulsory.

The bad news is that everything is prohibited.
