

Re: OT: Why People Are Not Free? (rant)

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2005-03/2971.html>

---

From: ~~SciGirl~~ (palmtree117_at_juno.com)

Date: 03/17/05

Date: 16 Mar 2005 16:07:11 -0800

Given your propensities to constantly take shortcuts and your unwillingness to follow established protocols, you won't get far in science anyway. Why don't you just go play in traffic?

This is one of the many things people here have said against me – and I can't say I fully disagree with it or any of the others.

I won't get far in science anyway: Who does? If you put all of the knowledge and achievements of everyone on Earth together, it would still be a fraction of what there is out there to accomplish and know. Besides, I might not even end up working in a science-related field. If I do, it will be meteorology. The other thing that interests me, though, is interior design.

I'm too stupid to post in Usenet: Probably. But if it's truly stupidity, then it is a mental condition rather than a personality trait and therefore I cannot fix it. Maybe you meant ignorant, or stubborn?

I'm a typical child: In a way, yes – I guess I'd probably have the intelligence of a typical child and the personality. In another way, no – most kids in my school break the dress code, do drugs, vandalize the school, etc., or all of those, none of which I do. I'm more of the nerdy kid who studies through lunch for no apparent reason.