

Re: PsychTest

---

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2006-03/msg02548.html>

---

- From: Keith <krw@xxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Sun, 19 Mar 2006 14:14:24 -0500
-

On Sun, 19 Mar 2006 18:52:13 +0000, Michael A. Terrell wrote:

Leon wrote:

Bob wrote:

What is the wallpaper on your desktop? It's like handwriting analysis. Quite telling. :-]

None. I view a computer as a tool not an entertainment device. I prefer having whatever small amount of computer resources it takes to display a desktop picture used by my applications instead. The desktop is covered with files I'm working on and is covered by programs almost all the time the computer is on. If I want to look at an image frequently I'll print it out and stick it on the wall.

I also prefer my sci newsgroups on topic and not containing retarded threads like this.

Bob

Me as well, I just have the standard blue background. I find anything else distracting.

Leon

Re: PsychTest

Do you really spend that much time looking at the computer's wallpaper? I only see mine when when I first boot up, or for a couple seconds when closing some applications. the rest of the time I am running something in full screen mode and its hidden.

You never have to start another application? I rarely run applications full screen. I keep the bottom and right sides of the screen clear so I can start my most common programs. I usually have a dozen or more windows[*] open and I arrange them so there is something peeking out of the most used ones to facilitate switching.

[*] At work I may have a dozen telnet sessions open to AIX system(s), plus another dozen or so Windows sessions.

--

Keith

.