I just saw one of those programs on the telly where lotz of americans get killed by a tornado then get saved buy the fire department and there were some really good shots of the electricity stuff blowing up and the bloke in charge said he knew there were people dieing out there when he saw that.

Anyway, I wondered why he didn't phone up the electricity company and ask them to switch it off before it got there. Then all of the electricity stuff wouldn't have blown up and all those americans would not have died.

That wouldn't been an exciting action thriller (US style) then would it ?
Suspension of disbelief is esential to enjoying Hollwood's best efforts.
