

Re: low noise amplifier for high impedance source

Re: low noise amplifier for high impedance source

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2006-10/msg03319.html>

- From: archiees@xxxxxxxxx
 - Date: 15 Oct 2006 20:10:02 -0700
-

Thanks for your reply Phil.

 Do you really have a current source ???

Yes, to my understanding. The source consists of 2 electrodes (Penning trap). Charged particles rotate between these electrodes and induce an image charge. This image charge is allowed to flow in an external circuit (like resistors) to constituting differential image current out of the electrodes.

.