I can remember around 1960, a storm so bad in Cambridge/Boston. everything shut down, buses, subways, everything.

So we walked several miles down the middle of thoroughfares, completely devoid of cars, to a party in Central Square ;-)

Reminds me of New Orleans in the week or so after the eye of Betsy passed directly overhead. The streets were layered with six feet of oak tree limbs, power lines, and stuff ripped off houses. The first thing people did was to clear a footpath in the middle of each street. I had a Honda 50 motorcycle, so I ran around visiting people and carrying messages. It was a couple of weeks before cars could drive

I had a similar experience a few weeks ago in Sunnyvale.

I was awakened by the sensation that the bed jerked.

I was by myself AND sober ;-)
