There's a heck of a lot. I know. A 'friend' of mine (jailed for a firearms offence) met Martin in jail in fact. He said he was a sad case who got himself there through his own stupidity. The facts of the matter stand though and that's why Martin was jailed. For murder.

Only, you are not telling us the facts of the matter. There is still more to the story.

The 'more to the story' is not relevant to the murder in question.

It is only not relevant to YOU, because the facts bare out the ignorance or your position.

What I think you are trying to say but haven't actually done so is that this murder was justified.

I do believe the circumstances were taken into consideration at his trial but I'm afraid for Mr Martin were not considered to be sufficient defence.
