

Re: OT: Eudora a good alternative to Thunderbird?

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2007-10/msg01830.html>

- From: Ecnerwal <LawrenceSMITH@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Wed, 10 Oct 2007 21:49:39 GMT
-

In article <zibPi.1418$Pv2.1280@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>, Joerg <notthisjoergsch@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

AFAIK no spam filter and that's really important these days.

Your mail service provider might provide some – Mine used to provide a great mode where they would flag stuff they thought was spam, and send it all downstream where I could filter it. Now it's either no filtering, or filtering on their system – they dumbed it down. Still, I find that a bunch of positive filters (pull off mail from real people you commonly email) and negative filters (the various popular spam words/misspellings) does a pretty good job on spam. I've used Eudora for decades, and never got into the paid version with spam filter (nor the ad version until after they stopped running ads, though it still brings up an annoying gray square).

Release (if it ever happens) of the open source equivalent seems to be glacial.

What I've seen of spam filters on other people's systems, and when exploring other mailers and not liking them enough to change has not been impressive.

--
Cats, coffee, chocolate...vices to live by

.