

Re: Airbus pic

---

Source: <http://sci.tech--archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2008-02/msg01020.html>

---

- From: "Paul Hovnanian P.E." <paulh@xxxxxxxxxxx>
  - Date: Fri, 08 Feb 2008 10:37:14 -0800
-

krw wrote:

In article <47A8BF3C.E6D608F0@xxxxxxxxxxx>, paulh@xxxxxxxxxxx says...

Eeyore wrote:

"Paul Hovnanian P.E." wrote:

I believe the photos of the 787 body section fit FUBAR are still floating around on a blog somewhere.

Can you elaborate on that ? I hadn't heard about it.

Sounds like it makes Airbus's A380 wiring loom problems that held it up look insignificant.

Graham

Last year, when Boeing started joining 787 body sections, some of them didn't quite fit. They were out by around 0.75 inches IIRC. Somebody on the shop floor took a photo of the gap and posted it on a blog. It stayed up there for months.

The link is on my other machine (if I kept it at all). I'll have to see if its still up.

Back when I worked for the 'Lazy B', they were pretty anal retentive about people with cameras and other recording devices even in the commercial division. It appears that their security has devolved into parking enforcement.

Re: Airbus pic

There is a sign at the dore of my CPOE that says that while camera phones are permitted, taking pictures is strictly prohibited. I suppose they had no choice.

'Had no choice' about what? Camera phones? They probably can't prohibit them. But they certainly have a choice about people who violate the rules with one. They can fire them. And then, as Airbus has demonstrated, they can get the photos taken down.

Toward the end of my sentence there, I worked for a guy who was running his s/w business on company time. I think when corporate moved to Chicago, everyone just said, "The Emperor is far away and the mountains are very high".

One of the receptionists at my PPOE was running her Internet porn site from work. They were also published as #1 on the hit-list for playboy.com some years back. Neither appreciated by TPTB.

Boeing canned Stoneciepher for writing a few love letters to his girlfriend. They claimed it might have been an 'embarrassment'. There are far more embarrassing things going on over there than Harry's love life. Things that can have a material effect on shareholder value. I dumped my stock some time ago.

--
Keith

--
Paul Hovnanian paul@xxxxxxxxxxxxxx

---

Procrastinators: The leaders for tomorrow.