

Re: 105 Hour warning

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2008-03/msg03583.html>

- From: Jim Thompson <To-Email-Use-The-Envelope-Icon@xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Fri, 21 Mar 2008 10:46:15 -0700
-

On Fri, 21 Mar 2008 17:10:21 +0000, G u y M a c o n <<http://www.guymacon.com/>> wrote:

Jim Thompson wrote:

Guy Macon has been on my dump list for years.

However I am willing to give him another chance... if other posters vouch that he is worthy ;-)

I challenge anyone to look at my recent posting history and find anything even slightly objectionable.

I strongly suspect that Jim Thompson is being unfair. Long ago I wrote something that he didn't like and he objected. I considered his objection, apologized, and never did it again. He has brought it up on occasion, and each time I have asked him what else I need to do to satisfy him. It appears that, once you get on Jim Thompson's shit list, you can never get off.

I just reviewed the last 2000 post to this newsgroup. Nine were by me, 66 were by Jim Thompson.

I posted about:

A direct reply to Jim Thompson giving him a method of filtering out troll feeder posts while allowing technical posts from the same posters — a solution that nobody else in the thread had mentioned.

Re: 105 Hour warning

Comments on open source electronic CAD systems such as Kicad or gEDA with what I consider to be some very useful URLs

A comment on whether "Never ascribe to malice that which is adequately >explained by stupidity" applies to Microsoft

A solution to a poster's problem of not being able to access NNTP servers from a corporate network with only port 80 open.

A solution to the same poster's problem of the IT department insisting that only they are allowed to install and manage JTAG pods.

A couple of posts to this thread.

During the same period, Jim Thompson posted many high-quality technical posts, but he also posted:

A comment about Israel nukes

Several classic trollfeeding