And sadly, Carly would be an improvement to the ticket!

How much "success" does it take to offshore thousands of US jobs and spin off divisions (namely, Compaq) to show short-term profits at the expense of long term viability?

Jobs moving offshore is simply companies fleeing oppression—a natural response. When the rules and burdens get too high, leave.

That's long-term, not short-sighted at all. Leave, or die.

Carly's sin was taking a first-class engineering outfit and turning it into a disposable printer cartridge factory; that's completely different.
