power, revels in the limelight for years, then quits, and spurred on by greed, cashes in with a scathing critique.

In my nearly 36 years of public service I've known of a few like you..
No doubt you will "clean up" as the liberal anti-Bush press will promote your belated concerns with wild enthusiasm. When the money starts rolling in you should donate it to a worthy cause, something like, "Biting The Hand That Fed Me." Another thought is to weasel your way back into the White House if a Democrat is elected. That would provide a good set up for a second book deal in a few years.

I have no intention of reading your "exposé" because if all these awful things were happening, and perhaps some may have been, you should have spoken up publicly like a man, or quit your cushy, high profile job. That would have taken integrity and courage but then you would have had credibility and your complaints could have been aired objectively. You're a hot ticket now but don't you, deep down, feel like a total ingrate?

BOB DOLE"

I still haven't seen anyone call McClellan a liar.

That's because he is not a liar. Everything he says is backed up by facts, by others and by the results of the war. It ain't rocket science folks.. Most of us knew all along the whole premise was BS from the get go.

And Now, the bastards are floating the same crap about Iran. Are we stupid enough to fall for the flim flam yet again. I hope not.

The Administration is in the stuck pig mode. They're like little kids with their fingers in the cookie jar squealing like hell that somebody told on them. History is not being kind to Bush and his neocons, that's for sure. There's more to come.

(2) I'm perfectly fine with standing out of the way while Iran lobs _one_ at Israel... then Israel decimates all of Arabia... RIP ;~)

It is very unlikely that Iran would start anything. Mr. I'm-a-dinnerjacket can thump his chest and yell all he wants but he isn't really in charge. The trend in Iran is towards the more moderate gaining power.

Re: Bob Dole E-mails McClellan

Iran has a weak presidency and many opposing factions in the government. The only thing that is likely to unite them would be an external threat or attack. Barring that they are trending towards being a democracy and have been for quite a while.

Absolutely! But we need to keep the pressure on "President" Imanutjob to keep the nuclear proliferation in check, until the moderates retake control.

You still have to worry that the pressure may help the extremists stay in power and perhaps expand their power. An external threat, real or imagined, is often the reason that people accept a non-democratic government.

The case for Iran wanting to make atomic bombs is weak. The numbers show that in perhaps 10 years time Iran will no longer be a net energy exporter so they have a valid reason to want atomic power. Some of their religious folks have called atomic weapons a moral outrage. This would make developing them politically risky. The lesson of N. Korea vs Iraq may not be seen to apply in Iran. All in all we need to tread carefully so as to make sure they never do have a motive for getting an atomic bomb.

But the real nut jobs are Richard Henry and Bob Eld ;-)
