

Re: An interesting view on how 'green' CFLs really are:

Re: An interesting view on how 'green' CFLs really are:

Source: <http://sci.tech-archive.net/Archive/sci.electronics.design/2008-07/msg04882.html>

- From: Richard Henry <pomerado@xxxxxxxxxxx>
 - Date: Wed, 30 Jul 2008 14:21:54 -0700 (PDT)
-

On Jul 30, 12:38 pm, "Michael A. Terrell" <mike.terr...@xxxxxxxxxxx> wrote:

Over the years I have seen a bunch of news stories about attempts to provide birth control pills in poor African nations. They provided the pills and classes on how to use them, then ome back to find they weren't taken properly, or the women made jewelry out of them. It's just like drilling wells and providing modern farming tools. They tach them how to farm, then the next year they just eat the seed corn and let the tools rust away. Some people don't want a better life, if it means they have to do anything for themselves. that is why thye live like they do. It's the same, all over the world. If those people were in the US, they would be trailer trash. If they wanted a better life, they would move to a town where they could find work, better food, and a better life. You just can't help spme people.

Nonsense.

.