Most of these stupidites are on forms where one is requesting information.

One would think that a requester knows their own e-mail address and if reasonably desirous of an answer, that they would enter their e-mail correctly.

If not, then tough tissue paper.

A "second", MANDATED request just compounds the stupidity that you allude to ("never end a sentence a preposition with").

OK, you know everything. Businesses never get bad information from potential customers. They never try to use none@xxxxxxx, or other obvious fake input, either.
