In article <48E99412.3A9DC7F7@xxxxxxxxxxx>, rabbitsfriendsandrelations@xxxxxxxxxxx says...

I met up with Kevin Aylward at my local music venue on Saturday. He's the guy who effectively took my place when I first left Studiomaster (pro-sound company) and does the Anasoft simulation software.

Had so much to chat about, we're going to have to meet up several more times just to cover the basics I think !

Anyway the venue closes late (2 pm) and Kevin left about midnight.

So I went to my favourite place where you can see the band (good band btw) quite well without being deafened plus it's handy for the bar and a little while later, this cute blonde pushed in next to me to order a drink.

Next thing I know, she made an offhand comment to me (girls do this – it's their technique) and next thing we're chatting away nineteen to the dozen.

Now, it was easy to tell she was quite young, but I wasn't expecting as young as 23 ! (sort of been there before and really wasn't sure what to do about nearly a decade ago). I don't think she was expecting me to be 54 either (she had me lined up as 40 something).

And the longer we were chatting, the more I realised she was absolutely lovely ! Great looks, nice personality.

Mind you she was a bit ! drunk – but that's what let's your inhibitions go.

Later she had to go for a wee and I suspect her friends picked her up and got her home.

Now, she's told me where she works, and it's dead easy to go there.

Re: Totally OT: this shouldn't happen to a 54 y.o. !

She's a manager at a clothes shop that does both guys and gals clothing. She called it the 'IKEA' of clothing and was wearing some herself and it looked damn good to me.

Funny thing is..... I haven't been able to stop thinking of her since. She has great taste in music and you know sometimes how you just 'click' with someone. It can be almost instantaneous.

I have to say, it's raised my spirits a lot but what do you think of the 31 year age gap ?

I think she was drunk.

Things like that do happen, though. You've got all sorts of couples out there.
